FOE FLEEING; 30,000 TAKEN

SERVANT OF U.S. FORCED OUT BY GERMAN BLOOD

Letters Show Paul Warburg Victim of War Spirit.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Letters which were exchanged between Paul M. Warburg and President Wilson at the time of the resignation of the former after four years of faithful service as member of the federal reserve board show the difficulties which are faced by loyal citizens of this country who are of German birth or extraction.

Mr. Warburg was born in Germany, but during the four years of 1914 to 1918 gave his entire time and ability to the service of the country, sacrificing his connections with many of the most important financial houses of New York in order to do so.

Reason for Asking Relief.

In his letter he says that he asks relief from the reserve board duty because "certain persons have started an agitation to the effect that a naturalized citizen of German birth, having near relatives in German public life, should not be permitted to hold a position of great trust in the service of the United States."

The president in replying and consenting "only because I read between the lines of your generous letter that you yourself will feel more at ease if you are left to serve in other ways," declared that Mr. Warburg's service had been most satisfactory.

Letter from Warburg.

Mr. Warburg's letter, which was sent to the president on May 27, was as follows:

"On Aug. 9 my four year term of office as a member of the federal reserve board will expire. I do not know whether or not under the constant burden of grave and pressing decisions you have reached the point where you wish to deal with the question of naming my successor, or whether or not you contemplate having me continue in this work. Nor would I presume to broach this question were it not that I feel that, in consequence of recent occurrences, it has become one of policy rather than of personalities.

Brothers Are German Bankers.

"Certain persons have started an agitation to the effect that a naturalized citizen of German birth, having near relatives prominent in German public, should not be permitted to hold a position of great trust in the service of the United States. (I have two brothers in Germany who are bankers. They now naturally serve their country to the utmost of their ability as I serve mine.)

"I believe that the number of men who urge this point of view are small at this time. They probably have not a proper appreciation of the sanctity of the oath of allegiange or of the oath of office.

"As for myself, I did not take them lightly. I waited ten years before determining my action, and I did not swear that 'I absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign potentate, and particularly to Wilhelm II., emperor of Germany,' etc., until I was quite certain that I was willing and anxious to cast my lot unqualifiedly and without reserve with the country of my adoption and to defend its aims and its ideals.

Tried to Do Full Duty.

"These are sad times. For all of us they bring sad duties, doubly hard indeed for men of my extraction. But, though, as in the civil war, brother must fight brother, each must follow the straight path of duty, and in this spirit I have endeavored to serve during the four years that it has been my privilege to be a member of the federal reserve board.

"I have no doubt that all fair minded and reasonable men would consider it nothing short of a national disgrace if this country, of all countries, should condone or endorse the attitude of those who would permit the American of German birth to give his all, but would not trust him as unreservedly and as whole heartedly as he, for his part, serves the country of his adoption.

"Unfortunately, however, in time of war we may not always count upon fair reasoning. It is only too natural that as our casualties grow bitterness and undiscriminating suspicion will assert themselves in the hearts of in-

BOTTLE SOLVES CYCLOPS CASE, OR IS IT JOKE?

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—A bottle containing either the explanation of the mysterious disappearance of the United States collier Cyclops some months ago or a grim practical joke was found yesterday, where it had floated ashore at quarantine station, by Frank Riston of this city.

The bottle, which was tightly corked, carried a paper on which was written with a blue crayon pencil the following message:

"Captured by German submarine off the coast of Virginia. Our ship, Cyclops." It was signed either "Rumman" or "Rummon, Chicago."

The message was scrawled on a strip of the waxed paper usually found in packages of tobacco.

ENDS HIS LIFE IN INVALID CHAIR

In the wheel chair he had occupied for twenty-eight years, Neil McNally, a paralytic patient at the Chicago Home for Incurables at 5534 Ellis avenue, was found dead yesterday near Fifty-ninth street in Jackson park. He was missed from the hospital Friday and the superintendent, F. D. Mitchell, believes that he wheeled himself to the park. Many automobiles and pedestrians passed McNally yesterday, but they thought he was asleep. A Hyde Park station policeman discovered he was dead. A bottle containing poison was found beside the chair. He was 41 years old and had been paralyzed in the lower limbs since he was 13.

Million Swiss Watches Ordered for Pershing Men

GENEVA, Aug. 10.—The headquarters of the American expeditionary forces in France has ordered 1,000,000 watches from Swiss firms for the use of the American troops operating in France.

FUNERAL PARTY IN AUTO CRASH; 1 DEAD, 5 HURT

Rounding Street Car, Machine Hits Another Head-On.

One woman pallbearer was killed yesterday and four other women and a man were injured so badly that they are in the Cook county hospital as the result of a funeral automobile colliding head-on with a Crawford avenue street car. The women were returning from the burial of Mrs. Anna Lipman, 1320 West Twentieth street.

The accident occurred near the bridge over the north branch of the river on Crawford avenue, when Edward Bartencik, chauffeur, tried to run around a street car on the wrong side, meeting another one coming at high speed.

The casualty list is as follows:

DEAD.

Mrs. Mary Budilovsky, 35 years old, 1845 South Throop street, skull crushed and internal injuries.

INJURED.

Mrs. Lena Linhart, 42 years old, 1341 West Nineteenth street, skull fractured and internal injuries.

Mrs. Mary Scandalia, 1343 West Nineteenth street, skull fractured and internal injuries.

Mrs. Magdalena Wagllovski, 40 years old, widow, 1708 South Racine avenue, skull fractured and many bruises.

Mrs. Mary Brennan, 29 years old, widow, 5320 West Twenty-fifth street, skull, nose, and jaw fractured.

Edward Bartencik, 2021 Throop street, driver of the auto; one eyeball gouged out and many bruises.

Wagon Blocked Street

All of the injured were taken to the Cook county hospital after they had been given temporary assistance at the Chicago Tuberculosis hospital. The accident, according to eyewitnesses, resulted from a wagon blocking the street at the right side of a south bound Crawford avenue car.

Unwilling to delay, the driver of the machine dashed around the car to the left. The impact was so great that the auto was demolished and the north bound street car derailed. One of the women was hurled through the front of the car, breaking the windows and landing on the platform.

Driver Against Car.

Bartencik was thrown upward and almost on top of the street car, striking it and bounding to the ground. The police said last night that when he is able to be removed from the hospital he will be arrested.

The wrecked automobile belonged to Anton Linhart, an undertaker at 1344 West Nineteenth street, and husband of Mrs. Lena Linhart, whose skull was fractured and whose injuries may be fatal.

Mrs. Lipman was president of the American Banner club, a neighborhood social organization, and Mrs. Linhart is secretary. All of the other injured women are members. It was said late last night that Mrs. Linhart, Mrs. Brennan, and Mrs. Waglovski are all so seriously injured that they may die.

YANKEES FIGHT BITTER WAY UP VESLE SLOPES

Push On in Inferno of Fire North of Fismette.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 10.—[Night.]—American troops advanced in force from Fismes today and after capturing Fismette began pressing northward up the steep slope of the Aisne-Vesle plateau.

Their advance was made in the face of Prussian counter attacks of the most savage character and was accompanied by fierce close range fighting.

The counter attacks were so ferocious as to cause the belief among American officers that the enemy may be attempting to prevent the capture of some long range gun north of the American sector.

Intense fighting was in progress during the day all along the railroad on the north bank of the Vesle. The Americans encountered enemy infantry in great strength and numerous machine gun nests on the Vesle slopes.

Drench Foe With Shells.

The Americans concentrated the most intense barrage possible upon this area, partially destroying German dugouts, intrenchments, and strong points.

Both artilleries are concentrating on the river valley between the highlands to the north and south.

German airmen are exceptionally aggressive, trying to prevent all allied observation. While seeking out a particular German gun yesterday, American aviators brought down two Boche battle planes.

Block Attacks Along Vesle.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE VESLE FRONT, Aug. 10.—[By the Associated Press.]—In attempting to dislodge the French and the Americans from positions from north of the Vesle river on both sides of Fismes, the Germans launched repeated counter attacks which began just before dark Friday night and continued until Saturday morning.

There was desperate fighting in the region of Fismette, where the German attacks were repulsed by the Americans who were clinging to the outskirts of the village.

In the region of Bazoches, the Germans made several vicious attacks, but the allies successfully fought them off.

Beat Off Hun Flyers.

The Germans began with airplane attacks, the aviators attempting to bomb infantrymen north of the Vesle and bridges over which other troops were passing. French and American anti-aircraft guns beat off the German flyers, however.

Just after dark the Germans launched an artillery attack which steadily increased in volume until nearly daylight, when the Franco-Americans counter attacked with such force that the Germans were forced to lessen the volume of their fire.

During the night the Germans attacked Fismette three times and once after daylight Saturday.

From the region southeast of Braisne to Fismes, the Franco-Americans put down such a terrific barrage that the Germans were stopped. Saturday morning the Teutons started another attack along the same line, but heavy artillery quickly checked this assault. The enemy used much gas in an attempt to dislodge the Americans from Fismette. Infantrymen plentifully supplied with machine guns also made futile attacks.

Foes Fight Americans Hard.

Whatever may be the ultimate intentions of the Germans, they have methodically thought out the problem of defending the heights north of the Vesle and are strongly discouraging all efforts to approach them.

The Germans doubtlessly encouraged the Americans with the idea that Fismes had been abandoned, because when the Americans entered the town they ran up against a liberal supply of machine gun nests. But as the enemy discovered at Seicheprey (east of St. Mihiel), it is one thing to get the Americans into a trap and another thing to get them out of it. The Germans in the end had the most unpleasant recollections of Fismes.

With Fismes occupied, the struggle for the valley began. The American crossing of the Vesle was a fine piece of work and coolly performed under searching enemy fire.

ROYE CAPTURED, LONDON HEARS; MORE PRISONERS

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The Weekly Dispatch declares it learns from well informed sources that the British offensive has netted 35,000 prisoners and that Roye has been captured. The paper declares Gen. von Hutier's army is in full retreat to the Somme.

BY FREDERICK A. SMITH.
[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 10.—Nine American planes this afternoon encountered twelve Boche machines north of Fismes. Five German planes gave battle against an equal number of Americans. Lieut. Walter T. Avery of Columbus, O., who downed Winkopf, the famous German ace, in Avery's first flight across the lines some time ago, was in the battle today and reports getting his man. Harold H. Buckley, a Massachusetts boy, also sent down a Boche.

POLICE, TRAILING CARL LODI, FIND ANARCHIST NEST

'Red' Newspaper Plant Also Unearthed in Raid.

Chicago police, following last night the trail of Carl Lodi, known to them as the sweetheart of "Linda José," the "dynamite girl," long held incommunicado by government officials, unearthed a nest of Chicago anarchists.

In a raid on a loft on the third floor of 818 South Morgan street they made two arrests, discovered the plant of an anarchist newspaper, the successor to the one whose editors are blamed for the Haymarket massacre; found arms and a complete ignition bomb.

Four men, two of whom were already in the county jail, and two others, who were arrested last night, are accused by them of being members of the anarchist gang, known as the International Propaganda group of anarchists.

Four Men Accused.

These four are:

William Judin of 1024 East Forty-third street, already under arrest in the county jail for conducting a lottery and faking a deportation charge.

Andrea Sistoni, also of 1024 East Forty-third street, also under arrest in the county jail, charged with violation of the immigration laws.

Frank Carnavalis, arrested last night at 818 South Morgan street, member of the late Dan Wallace's group of conscientious objectors.

Nicholas Carnavalis, brother of Frank, arrested with him and also a conscientious objector.

Edited from Jail.

All are charged with having conducted a disloyal newspaper, the Social War Bulletin, which the police say is the successor of the old Alarm, the publication blamed for the Haymarket riots.

From evidence obtained last night, the police are of the opinion that this paper has been edited from the county jail ever since Judin and Sistoni were arrested. Judin is believed to have been the principal editor, and letters found in the newspaper plant indicated that he had sent articles to be published since his arrest.

These articles denounced the government of the United States, declaring that America was no longer a free country and suggesting means to correct conditions.

The prisoners captured last night are being held to be questioned by Hinton G. Clabaugh's men today.

Oak Park Must Get On Without Sunday Movies

Oak Park must continue to do without moving picture shows on Sundays. F. A. Pringle, village attorney, wrote an opinion that the village board's order preventing the showing of motion pictures was valid and would be supported by the Supreme court. Discussions for and against the measure were attended Friday night by nearly 200 citizens of the village. The theater managers announced that the younger element were going to other villages in the vicinity on Sundays as a result of the ordinance.

ALLIES WIN MONTDIDIER; CUT CHAULNES, RAIL BASE

Germans Forced Out of Amiens Salient on 50 Mile Front; Battle Spreading; Yanks Help British

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The famous Picardy salient, which six months ago threatened to split the allied armies and inflict a German peace on the world, is fast becoming the graveyard of the kaiser's hopes.

The huge bulge is melting away before the combined onslaught of British, French, Australians, Canadians, and Americans under the leadership of Field Marshal Haig.

The allied drive, begun Thursday morning over a meager front of less than twenty miles, between Morlancourt and Hargicourt, has grown to a width of more than fifty miles, extending in an irregular line from Albert to Oise.

Battle Spreading North to Arras.

Reports received today stated that the fighting is spreading northward toward Arras and eastward toward the Oise. When it will have reached those points the battle will present a front of nearly seventy-five miles.

Fifteen miles north of Arras is La Bassee, the southern extremity of the Flanders salient. Approximately the same distance east of the Oise is Soissons, the western extremity of the Aisne-Vesle front.

The allies, according to the latest reports, have penetrated to Chaulnes in the center of their Picardy attack. This town is twelve miles east of Hangard, where the assault began. Moreuil, Rosieres, Ressons-sur-Matz, Morlancourt, and scores of lesser towns have been recaptured.

Montdidier has fallen to the French and Albert is in imminent danger. Nesle, Roye, Lassigny, Bray, and even Peronne are threatened.

Cut Off Germans' Biggest Rail Base.

Important German lines of communication have been cut. French troops by entering Chaulnes captured the biggest German rail base in the salient. Other important rail points are under bombardment by artillery and airplanes. The enemy retirement within the salient is reported to be greatly congested, and great numbers of men and huge quantities of material are being cut off.

The total of German prisoners was officially placed at 24,000 today, but unofficial estimates were as high as 30,000. More than 400 cannon have been captured.

In their smash forward the allies have torn to pieces eleven German divisions. Some of these are in such condition that they can be of little use to the German command for a long time to come, and probably some of them can never be reformed.

The allied casualties, it is reported, are not more than 6,000 for the three days, less than a quarter of the number of prisoners so far counted. This remarkable situation is believed to be due to the refusal of the Germans to counter attack. At every point they have contented themselves with fighting rear guard actions, except at Morlancourt, where they held up the left wing of the allied advance in the early fighting.

Yankees Help British Drive Forward.

It was at Morlancourt that the first Americans were employed. Co-operating with the British, they helped capture the village and the heights to the southward and held them against counter attacks. They also took Chipilly Spur, north of the Somme, and continued to advance. It is reported that one division (27,500 Americans) were in the fighting at this point.

The main battle front now apparently runs from Albert southeastward across the Somme through Proyart to Chaulnes, southward to Fouquescourt, to the east of Le Quesnoy, where it joins the French left wing northwest of Roye.

The advanced French front runs in front of Audichy, Laboissiere, and Fiscamps. During the day the French extended the action twelve and one-half miles to the southeast toward the Oise river, driving the German left wing out of Rollot, Orvillers, Sarrel, Ressons-sur-Matz, Couchy-les-Pots, La Neuville-sur-Lessons, and Elincourt. With Chaulnes lost to the Germans, the enemy is reported retiring to the Noyon-Nesle canal.

How Enemy Is Being Trapped.

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
[United Press Staff Correspondent.]

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 10, 8:35 p. m.—Under pressure from English, Canadian, Australian, French, and American troops the German retirement continued today all along the Picardy line.

Both Gen. von der Marvitz and Gen. von Hutier are throwing into rear guard action odds and ends of troops, wherever they can scare them up, in order to gain time.

The French are in Montdidier, pushing eastward and northward from the bottom of the salient. They have entered Chaulnes, the important railway base of the German salient.

Storming the desperately defended positions north of the Somme, the Americans and British secured the whole series of objectives within fifteen minutes after the commencement of the attack. After taking Morlancourt and the heights to the south the Anglo-Americans stormed Chipilly spur and were advancing eastward along the ridge between the Ancre and the Somme as this was written.

The allies are nearing the Somme crossing south of Peronne, which may furnish only a brief respite for the fleeing Germans.

The Canadians and Australians, blasting their way through the center, have captured Bouchoir, only six miles from Roye, and also have taken Folies, Beaufort, Warvillers, Vrely, Rosieres, Meharicourt, Rouvroy, and Lihons. The latter is only two miles west of Chaulnes. They pushed their patrols into Proyart and Rainecourt, advancing their lines more than three miles in brilliant fighting. Among their prisoners is a complete divisional staff.

Two Armies Badly Mauled.

Crown Prince Rupprecht's entire second and eighteenth armies already are badly mauled. The German losses are conservatively estimated at between fifty and sixty thousand. Personally I believe that 400 guns is the lowest possible estimate of captured artillery.

Prisoners believe the Germans will be unable to hold the line from Noyon to Peronne, along the Somme and the canal, toward which they are retreating. Field Marshal Haig is too close behind to permit any organized resistance there.

Allied airmen continue to harass the disorganized enemy, whose confusion behind the lines as they retreat is almost indescribable, while our artillery is pounding them everywhere.

Guns, howitzers, and field pieces up to eight inches and larger were taken intact, either still in position or overturned in the roadside gullies, with their gun limbers nearby in the ditches, because the allied cavalry, supported by whippets, tanks, and armored cars, were at the Germans' heels. Lorries loaded with artillery maps and other headquarters documents and material were left in the road, their drivers being killed or captured by the cavalry.

One car penetrated a town and set fire to a train. Another headed off and killed an aviation officer trying to escape in his automobile. The automobile was captured.

Airmen reported the roads in the region of Roye and Nesle packed with troops retiring eastward. It was learned from prisoners that German officers made desperate efforts to rally their men wherever they assembled, even in an handful, to make whatever resistance was possible, principally by fighting from machine gun nests.

Cavalry Charges Battery.

These were easy pickings for the whippets, which bore down rapidly, firing their machine guns as they went. The men who ran were killed and those who resisted were ground into the earth, staining the sides of the whippets with blood. Surrender was the only alternative.

In places the Germans fought stubbornly. One battery of field guns, firing point blank and somewhat damaging the tanks, was charged by cavalry with drawn sabers. The gun crews were killed or captured.

Cavalry charging past Beaufort encountered a German officer frantically waving his hands and shouting: "Don't enter the village. It's brigade headquarters." The officer was taken prisoner and the cavalry dashed into the village and killed some and captured others of the brigade staff officers, including the brigadier general.

Farther north armored cars penetrated huts which were serving as corps headquarters. Many staff officers were killed.

Vast quantities of ammunition on the ground—greater than the number of German guns warranted—indicated that some of the artillery was being used elsewhere, perhaps supporting the sorely pressed crown prince.

Rupprecht's reply to Haig's artillery was rather feeble. The stiffest resistance was on the extreme flanks. The British had some difficulty north of the Somme. The French met stubborn opposition eastward of Moreuil, and crossing of the river proved difficult. The Germans held Grenonville wood, atop the ridge, on the eastern bank, between Moreuil and Plessier, and they made the valley sizzle with machine gun bullets.

French Storm Ridge.

The French attacked once and were forced back. Their second attempt won the ridge and wood. French cavalry poured through the opening, quickly joining up with British cavalry operating down the Amiens-Roye road past Mezieres toward Lequensel, which held out for a day.

French and British troops are coöperating beautifully. Comparatively few allied dead have been found on the battlefield. Conservative observers say there are ten German dead to one ally. But apparently neither side suffered as much as in some other battles.

The allies' advance was too rapid to allow the enemy much accurate shooting, save in spots, and the Germans ran too fast to be caught in the creeping barrage in great numbers. But there have been heavy German casualties.

Many prisoners seemed pleased at being captured. They whistled and shouted welcomes to new batches arriving at the cages. Others were greatly depressed, appearing to believe that this is the beginning of the end.

They evidently do not think that Hindenburg will ever be able to resume the offensive. Signs of a withdrawal from other salients on the British front might tend to confirm this belief.

YANKS IN HARD BATTLE

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 10.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Americans and British have now advanced beyond their objectives north of the Somme. The whole of the Chipilly spur is now in their possession after fighting of the most desperate character.

The casualties of the Americans were not more than was to be expected considering the bitterness of the fighting.

[One division of Americans is engaged north of the Somme, according to London dispatches. There are 27,500 men in an American division.]

Race to Get Into Fight.

Details of the brilliant battle which the Americans and British fought for the spur are now available. In order to go over the top at the appointed time yesterday afternoon the Americans were forced to make a rapid march, in the last part of which they ran so as to be in the fight.

The American machine gunners and infantry went into battle with their traditional enthusiasm. They met the Germans and defeated them here, just as they did along the Marne.

At places stiff resistance developed, but all along the line the Americans, British, and French smashed through the harassed enemy, who was trying to hold up their advance.

Chipilly spur, north of the Somme, was captured by the American and British troops at 6 o'clock last night. The attack began at 5 o'clock, when the allies drove forward between the Ancre and the Somme. They were supported by tanks and were preceded by a heavy barrage fire. The enemy was driven toward Bray, northeast of Chipilly.

In the American attack the German infantry held for a while and then broke, and the Americans kept going, at some places without the assistance of the tanks. The ground, pitted with deep gullies, was unsuited for tank warfare.

Run Up to Enemy Line.

There were no trenches, but a thin smoke screen blowing across the ground indicated where the enemy's positions lay. At the same time the German artillery became active and dropped shells in the direction of the American troops which inflicted a few casualties. The Americans, however, ran on and reached the smokeline just as it lifted. There they found themselves at grips with the enemy.

Meanwhile certain American units had reached positions in front of a wood when the Germans opened fire with machine guns. Many of these enemy machine gunners came up from deep dugouts after the American barrage had ceased and they placed their guns in prepared pits. The Americans faced a hail of bullets here.

The Germans continued to fire until the Americans and English put them out of action.

Foe Removes Heavy Guns.

North of the Somme and also south of it the Germans are showing every sign of a rapid retreat. Most of the shells that came over from the batteries today were of small caliber and fired at extremely long range, showing that the enemy probably was removing his heavier pieces for a further retirement. The allied forces, who everywhere today advanced their lines, moved their artillery along with them.

The enemy continues to destroy his stores of munitions in various localities along the battle front, as is the practice of a beaten army.

Further successes east of Montdidier would iron out the whole sector north to Lihons and result in the freeing of a great territory from the Germans and wresting from them much of the gains that resulted from the enemy's spring offensive. In addition, a forward movement would take from the invaders the bountiful crops that they have been cultivating inside their lines and which now are ready to harvest.

Hurl in Four New Divisions.

Many more prisoners have been taken during the operations of the last twenty-four hours, among them troops from at least four new divisions that were hurled in north of the Somme. Apparently the enemy has rushed in new troops from wherever they could be obtained, for among the prisoners are some from reserve battalions of divisions located far to the north.

This would indicate that considerable confusion prevails among Crown Prince Rupprecht's forces as a result of the unexpected allied assaults and their continued success.

FRENCH OVERWHELM FOE.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 10, 5 p. m.—[By the Associated Press.]—The French attacked this morning in the sector east of Montdidier, between Courcelles-Epayelles and the Matz. There was no artillery preparation before the attack. The Germans were on the alert, but were completely overwhelmed by the suddenness of the attack.

By 8 o'clock tanks were in Ressons-Sur-Matz and by 11 o'clock the French had taken Mortemer, Cuvilly, and Marqueglise. At some points the advance was nearly five miles.

Caught in Jaws of Vise.

The Germans at Montdidier are caught between the jaws of a vise which were closing in this morning. Converging attacks from the north yesterday and from the south this morning had succeeded in virtually encircling the town.

They had also rendered useless to the Germans the Montdidier-Chaulnes railway, which was the only line feeding the front at the bottom of the Montdidier pocket. The forces remaining there were in danger of not getting out without heavy losses.

The booty taken during the last two days has been so large that it has not been possible to make an inventory of it as yet. It includes an enormous number of shells of all calibers and arms of all descriptions.

Capture Big Guns.

The attack extended to the eastward this morning, giving an unexpected development in the French participation in the battle. The wounded men coming back from the front are radiant with enthusiasm, shouting to their comrades, "The Boche is on the run."

The French have captured twenty-one cannon since last night, including six eight inch guns at La Neuville-sur-Ressons. The Germans had moved the most of their heavy guns to the rear and defended their positions at Montdidier principally with machine guns.

French Show Old Dash.

In this new battle of the Somme the French are showing that after four years of war they have lost none of their dash and courage. They have also proved that the Germans are not always able to plead surprise as an excuse for defeat. The French successes north of Montdidier were partially due to surprise, but the Germans were aware of the impending attack south of the town. They were defeated just the same.

Attacking at 6 o'clock last evening, the French troops conquered the heights of Assainvillers and Rubecourt in two hours. This morning they struck along the line down the front through the region of Mery, southeast of Montdidier, and moved their line ahead more than four miles, taking Faverolles by storm.

Losses Equal Captured Booty.

The present battle has brought more German wounded to the allied casualty clearing stations than there are wounded among the allied soldiers. Many German doctors and hospital attendants have been captured and they are doing good service in attending the wounded.

Since July 18 the Germans have lost almost as much material as they captured in their big offensives earlier in the year.

Four Britons Fly 2,000 Miles; Land in Egypt

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Two royal air force officers, with two mechanics, have completed a flight from England to Egypt, a distance of 2,000 miles, in a type of airplane that has seen considerable service on the front. The official report, in announcing this feat, says: "One or two halts were made for petrol, but the flight was merely a bit of routine work."

BATTLE STATEMENTS

BRITISH REPORT.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The war office issued tonight the following statement:

"The attack launched yesterday evening, in accordance with the allied plan of operations on our right by the French first army south of Montdidier was developed by our allies this morning with complete success. Enveloped from the north and from the southeast, Montdidier fell into the hands of the French before midday, together with many prisoners and great quantities of material."

During the remainder of the day the advance of the French first army continued with the co-operation of the French army on its right and the right wing of the British fourth army. Pressing hard upon the retreating German troops south of Lihons, the British troops have overcome the enemy's resistance and made substantial progress.

The general line reached by the allied troops now runs virtually north and south from Lihons to Fresnoy-Les-Roye, Lignieres, and Conchy-Les-Pots. The number of prisoners was increased.

The earlier statement said:

Yesterday afternoon and evening the advance of the allied armies continued on the whole front from south of Montdidier to the Ancre.

French troops, attacking south of Montdidier during the afternoon, captured Le Tronquoy, Le Fretoy, and Assainvillers, threatening Montdidier from the southeast. Over 2,000 prisoners were captured by our allies in this sector.

Canadian and Australian divisions have taken Bouchoir, Meharicourt, and Lihons and have entered Rainecourt and Proyart.

In the evening English and American troops attacked in the angle between the Somme and Ancre and met with immediate success. By nightfall all the objectives had been taken, including the village of Morlancourt and the high ground southeast of it. Counter attacks launched by the enemy in this sector were beaten off after sharp fighting.

The prisoners captured by the allies since the morning of Aug. 8 exceed 24,000.

FRENCH REPORT

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The war office issued this statement tonight:

On the Avre battle front our attacks continued all day with increasing success. After the morning's operations Montdidier, outflanked on the east and the north, fell into our hands. Continuing our victorious advance on the right of the British forces, we carried our lines nearly seven miles to the east of Montdidier on a front running from Andechy to Laboissiere and Fescamps.

Still enlarging our action southeast, we have attacked German positions on the right and left of the road from St. Just-en-Chaussee to Roye on a front of more than thirteen miles. We conquered Rollot, Orvillers-Sorel, Ressons-sur-Matz, Conchy-les-Pots, La Neuville-sur-Ressons, and Elincourt, realizing at some points an advance of nearly seven miles.

In three days of battle French troops have progressed nearly fourteen miles along the Amiens-Roye road. The number of prisoners taken during the same period exceeds 8,000. Among the enormous material abandoned by the enemy we have counted up to the present time 200 guns.

The earlier statement said:

The French troops operating on the right of the British forces continued their success throughout last evening and last night. Our troops progressed east of Arvillers and captured Davenescourt.

They attacked south of Montdidier, between Ayencourt and Le Fretoy, and occupied Rubescourt and Assanivillers and reached Faverolles.

GERMAN REPORT.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—(Via London.)—The German war office issued this statement tonight:

In the center of the battle front the enemy has gained ground beyond Rosieres and Hangest.

Our counter attacks brought him to a standstill west of Lihons and east of the Rosieres-Arvillers line.

During the night we withdrew our troops fighting on the Avre and on Dom brook to the rear lines east of Montdidier. Southeast of Montdidier we repulsed strong partial attacks of the French. We shot down thirty-two airplanes over the battlefield.

There has been lively activity on the part of the enemy between the Yser and the Ancre. At many points on this front the enemy launched thrusts and partial attacks, which were repulsed before our lines in hand to hand fighting.

Yesterday the British and French, bringing strong reserves into action, continued their attacks on the whole battle front between the Ancre and the Avre.

On both sides of the Somme and astride the Foucaucourt-Villers-Bretonneux road we threw the enemy back by counter attacks. He suffered heavy losses here.

FOCH NOW HOLDS WHIP HAND OVER HIS OPPONENTS

Ignores Enemy's Plans and Strikes Germans as He Decides.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The "revenge of the British" as the new allied offensive east of Amiens is called here, simply confirms a little prophesy I indulged in my cable last Sunday, when I asserted that Foch's next blow would come much sooner than most people expected.

Perhaps tomorrow's Germany's communiques will say the enemy is in the course of achieving before Amiens what Ludendorf will claim is another tactical victory in the form of a hasty withdrawal from another slice of French terry, but expert opinion sees in the British victory which is now in progress much more that the spectacular inauguration of Foch on his new career as marshal of France.

Foch Now the Master.

It is realized here that Foch's latest blow has been struck at a point which he himself had chosen after a careful consideration of the whole strategic position. The new battle is one more proof of the immediate change that has come over the entire aspect of the war as a result of Foch's vitally important blow against the German right flank in the Aisne-Marne salient on July 18.

As a result of that blow, Foch can now make the Germans dance to his piping. It is the allies who now have the initiative, and when Foch decides to strike there the German reserves will have to run to meet the blow. Indications are that Foch's blows from now on until at least the end of next month, will be rapid and frequent.

Worrying the German Beast.

The rapidity with which the allied attack before Amiens has followed the second victory of the Marne amply confirms this view. Foch is worrying the German beast, and the satisfactory feature of the operation is that there is now no reason why he should not continue harrying him until the maddened foe is compelled to submit through sheer inability to continue the struggle.

All the trumps, present and future, are now in our hands, and there is no longer any need to talk about "if" we win and "when" we win. We are winning. The final victory has actually begun.

The key to the whole situation today may be found in the fact that the enemy is now faced with a greater necessity than ever before speedily to secure a victory that will enable him to wrest from the allies a peace in any true compromise.

Kaiser May Hit for Channel Ports.

The most likely point to which he would direct his attention would be the channel ports, and doubt is felt there that it is safely the channel ports, and incidentally the British coast opposite, that forms one of perhaps several underlying strategic reasons for the battle that Foch began yesterday.

The recent voluntary retirement of Rupprecht on the Ancre and the Avre may have been due to the realization of the Germans that it is politic to straighten out their front on that sector, but at the same time it may have been a preparatory step toward an attempted blow from the Arras-Ypres line in the direction of Hazabrouck and Calais. Such a blow, it is pointed out, would have the advantage of enabling the kaiser to utilize his hitherto powerless fleet in combination with a tremendous effort on land. Color is given to this possiility by the recent replacement of Von Capelle as head of the German navy by the ambitious Von Scheer, who will obviously be anxious to curry favor with his all highest war lord by some display that would enable the German navy to escape from its pitiful position in which the allied fleet has held it down for the last four years.

Foch Ignores Foe's Plans.

The battle today shows that Foch deliberately ignored the enemy's plans in this direction and attacked further south. The result, in so far as Calais is concerned, is the same. The new allied offensive is an integral part of Foch's plan to protect Calais, and, at the same time, has the advantage of drawing a good many German reserves away from their striking point in the event of an enemy attack on the coast becoming an accomplished fact.

Moreover, by driving in the Germans before Amiens the allies are disengaging the Paris-Amiens-Calais railway, just as by their offensive between the Aisne and the Marne they last week disengaged the Paris-Chalons-Nancy line. These two great lines form vitally important parts of the tremendous vice between the jaws of which the German wild beast is being slowly but surely crushed.

Reserves the Vital Issue.

More than ever the vital question has become one of reserves. It is realized here with pride and delight that the present battle is one more confirmation of the wisdom of the unification of the allied command. "With the nomination of Foch as generalissimo," says one critic, "the good times of the German general staff passed away."

To emphasize this it is pointed out that the German crown prince, in order to get out of the hole in which the allied armies surprised him between the Aisne and the Marne, had to appeal to Rupprecht to lend him his best divisions. When Foch decided that Rupprecht had been sufficiently weakened by being robbed of his reserves to help his brother crown prince he gave the order for Rupprecht's own front to be attacked.

Indicted Raincoat Firms Lose All U. S. Contracts

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Immediate cancellation of all contracts for raincoats with the firms and individuals who have been indicted in connection with the alleged fraud, bribery, and corruption in the selling of raincoats to the war department was ordered today by Brig. Gen. R. E. Wood, acting quartermaster general.

GERMANS PUT FULL BLAME FOR DEFEATS ON CROWN PRINCE

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Reuter's Limited correspondent with the British army in France sends the following dispatch concerning the German crown prince:

"According to the statements of prisoners the German crown prince appears to be the most unpopular leader in the German army. He is accused by them of being directly responsible for the Marne disaster.

"They say that the opinion is widely expressed by German soldiers that the crown prince's amateurish interference with the plans of their experienced generals was the starting point for the present crushing misfortunes of the German armies."

FEDERAL MEDALS FOR CIVILIAN WAR WORKERS

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—A design for the United States war industries badge has been created, and every effort will be made to have the medals ready by Sept. 1, the date set for inaugurating the award of the department of labors industrial service insignia to deserving civilian war workers.

On and after that date, the department announces, every man and woman who is faithfully doing his or her share in producing war supplies will be eligible for this federal recognition of patriotism.

Charles T. Clayton, director of the civilian insignia service of the department of labor, announces that the war industries badge will be disc shaped slightly larger than a quarter, and will be attached to a red, white, and blue enamel bar one and three-quarters inches long. Four consecutive months of uninterrupted service in war production will entitle a worker to the first badge, which will be of bronze. Eligibility to the second badge, which will be cast from the same die, but made of different metal, possibly silver, will result from eight consecutive months of war service.

'BUSTER BROWN,' ORIGINAL, HURT IN AIR CRASH

New York, Aug. 10.—Richard F. Outcault Jr., the original "Buster Brown," a son of the cartoonist, was injured in an airplane accident in France a few weeks ago, according to letters received by friends of the family here today.

Young Outcault is a member of the Two Hundred and Thirteenth air squadron. It is said his machine collided with two other planes when several hundred feet in the air. The extent of Outcault's injuries was not stated.

When the Tuscania was torpedoed Feb. 5 last off the Irish coast Outcault was among the American aviators aboard who for a time was believed to have been lost.

'Goes Over Top' in His Sleep at Training Camp

Company 18, known as the Grenadiers, at the students' training camp at Fort Sheridan, was awakened in the dark hours of yesterday morning by what was termed an "unholy yelling." Everything from murder to Germans shot through the minds of the men until, as the lights were switched on, a man fell over a cot and the weird yells ceased.

"I thought I was going over the top," he explained sheepishly as he rearranged his pajamas and crawled back into bed.

"If you walk in your sleep 'over there,'" commented another student, "you'll scare the Germans back to Berlin."

Soldier Finds Alien Too Friendly with His Wife

Peter Papaginnis, 26 years old, an alien, was arrested yesterday on complaint of John Kordio, 1127 Berwyn avenue, a soldier at Camp Grant. Kordio alleges that when he came home on furlough neighbors told him Papaginnis had been paying attentions to Mrs. Kordio. He further alleges that when he went to see Papaginnis about it in a fruit store at 1233 Foster avenue the latter met him with a knife. Papaginnis, who claimed exemption as an alien, will appear in Morals court tomorrow.

China Refuses to Accept Friend of Admiral Hintze

PEKING, Aug. 10.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Chinese government has declined to receive Mgr. Petrelli, recently appointed papal nuncio to China, on the ground that he is a personal friend of Admiral von Hintze, German secretary of foreign affairs and late minister to Peking.

BASE OF WINTER SUPPLIES PRIZE WON BY ALLIES

Successes Substantial from Even a Conservative Standpoint.

BY MAJOR GENERAL SIR F. B. MAURICE.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The promise of yesterday's news has been more than fulfilled, and it already is possible, without undue optimism, to claim that we have gained a substantial success.

Amiens has been relieved from the menace which has threatened it for so many months, while the important junction at Longneau, just to the east of the town, and the Amiens-Clermont railroad have been freed. These results are of a very real value, for it is not possible to contemplate with equanimity the prospect of facing the winter without being able to make full use of the important communications passing through Amiens.

The feature of the battle so far has been the depth of the ground gained in the first days of the fighting. I do not think that in any battle in the west since trench warfare started, either we, or our allies, or the Germans ever before succeeded in making a first advance of seven miles.

Gives Praise to Tanks.

It is evident that the tanks had a good deal to do with making this possible. They must now have definitely established their reputation in the army, which is a matter of the greatest importance. Soldiers are naturally conservative and disinclined to give their confidence to a new weapon, or to a new arm of service till it has proved its worth. Our first tanks were slow, frequently got into difficulties, and often failed to fulfill the high expectations which had been formed of them, with the not unnatural result that both the commanders and troops were inclined to look upon them as broken reeds.

The new tank is in every way a very great advance upon its prototype.

Great Aid to Foch.

Foch's great counter attack owes much of its success to the skillful employment of tanks in large numbers, and now the tanks again have contributed largely to our successes, and improved almost beyond recognition upon the first experiment at Cambrai.

The barrier in the west was held to be impenetrable because, for a time, we could find no other means of breaking through than a prolonged artillery bombardment. This advertised to the enemy the fact that we were about to attack, made surprise impossible, and enabled him to hold his reserves in readiness to meet our anslaught.

Permit Factor of Surprise.

Furthermore, the effect of a prolonged and intense bombardment was to destroy the surface of the ground to an extent which often made it a matter of the greatest difficulty for the infantry to go forward and to bring up supplies and ammunition when they had advanced. Recent experience has shown that with tanks a long bombardment is unnecessary, which in turn reintroduced surprise as a weapon of generalship and made it possible to penetrate the barrier successfully.

Looking Ahead.

It would therefore be too much to expect that the first two days' progress could be continued at the same rate, and it would be no surprise if the enemy made a desperate effort to retrieve his position south of the Somme, where he is at present deeply compromised. As it is it seems improbable that the enemy will be able to maintain himself in the salient between Roye and Montdidier, and if we can secure and hold the railway junction at Chaulnes it is certain that the enemy must make a withdrawal in some respects comparable with that which he has just carried out on the Marne front. The most the Germans can hope for at present is that their reserves will arrive in time to prevent such a disaster, and this must so weaken their offensive power as to throw them definitely on the defensive for some time to come.

Haig Struck in Nick of Time.

The news that the enemy had mined roads and was making other preparations for a withdrawal is significant when taken in conjunction with other reports of his man power difficulties consequent upon his losses on the Marne. It is impossible yet to say whether he was intending to economize his troops with a view to attacking at some other part of the front, but it is evident that whatever were his intentions Sir Douglas Haig has struck in the nick of time, has upset his plans, and is on the way to shorten his front for him in a way which he will not like.

KEEP FOE ON RUN, BIG WAR AIM NOW, GEN. MARCH SAYS

Confidential Report Discloses Extent of the Amiens Victory.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—"This is the time for the greatest efforts; keep the enemy running."

Gen. March, chief of staff, summarized thus today to newspaper men the situation in France. Standing before the great military maps at the war department that show clearly just where the German is being beaten back, he pointed out that the great battle front was rapidly being straightened out from Reims to the sea.

"They have not yet," he said, "gotten back to the original Hindenburg line where the German began his advances this year. We still have some territory to gain, so when statements appear that indicate the war is over at this point, discourage it.

Time for Big Effort.

"This is the time for the greatest effort; keep the enemy running. That is the reason the United States is being called upon for increased man power; that is the reason we want the age limits for the draft both lowered and raised to get more men.

"It is no time now to talk about the war being over. It is the time to hit hard.

"The greatest advantage of the whole thing has been the change of the allies from the defensive to the offensive, which is a great military asset. We have the enemy guessing now instead of guessing ourselves."

Nibbling Along Vesle.

Describing the effect of the allied operations, Gen. March said:

"Surveying the battle line broadly you see that there have been a number of places where we have been nibbling along the Vesle river front, acquiring a foothold on the northern bank, but have not yet attempted to go up the slopes on the north side where German intrenchments are supposed to be. That part of the line has remained stationary.

"As the line has become stationary Foch has kept up his pressure on the enemy, working on the perfectly sound principle that when you get an enemy going, keep him going; never give him a chance to recuperate or think it over; keep on hitting him."

British Front Situation.

From a confidential report Gen. March read the following account of the situation on the British-French front south of Albert:

"Allied troops found little opposition and have captured more prisoners than it is possible for them to handle, including a German general and his staff, showing elements of surprise attack. British report their prison camps back of Amiens so full that it is impossible to hold more. Allies have captured all the artillery in this sector."

Americans with British.

Gen. Pershing had not advised him that American division is operating with the British in the present Picardy drive, Gen. March said. A London report says American troops achieved a "considerable success between the Somme and the Ancre."

Indications were the choice lay between the Thirty-third Illinois national guard division and the Twenty-seventh New York national guard division.

Gen. March pointed out that the Picardy drive follows the same general line of strategy as the Foch pincer movement in the Aisne-Marne sector, promising the same successful result.

Summary of British Drive.

Summarizing the British drive on official reports up to the hour of his conference, Gen. March said:

"On Aug. 8 a combined British and French force, commanded by Field Marshal Haig, attacked on a front of twenty miles east of Amiens.

Hitting the big salient on a thirteen mile front, we pushed it in an average of eight miles and reduced it from an outer salient to an inner salient.

"That gives us a salient somewhat corresponding to the Marne salient and places the enemy again in a bad position.

Résumé of Rainbow Drive.

Gen. March outlined the part taken in the drive by the Rainbow division.

"The Rainbow division," said Gen. March, "had its combat training in the Lorraine sector north of Luneville. It left that position to arrive east of Reims, where on July 15 it helped break the main German attack. When the French-American counter offensive was launched on the Marne salient the division appeared there shortly in relief of other units. Our reports indicate the following:

"In eight days of battle the Forty-second division has forced the passage of the Ourcq, taken prisoners from six enemy divisions, met, routed, decimated a crack division of the Prussian guard and Bavaraian division and one other division, and driven back the enemy lines for sixteen kilometers."

Eighty-Fifth Division Arriving.

Gen. March reported that the Eighty-fifth division, which trained at Camp Custer, Mich., is arriving overseas.

"The infantry," he said, "has all gotten in, but some of the artillery has not yet landed.

"The Twenty-ninth division, which trained at Anniston, Ala., was reported in the Alsace sector, southeast of Epinal. The Seventy-ninth division, which recently left Camp Meade, Md., is still in the training area."

Troop shipments for the first week of August were on the same approximate scale as in July, when 300,000 men were moved, senate military committee members said they were informed.

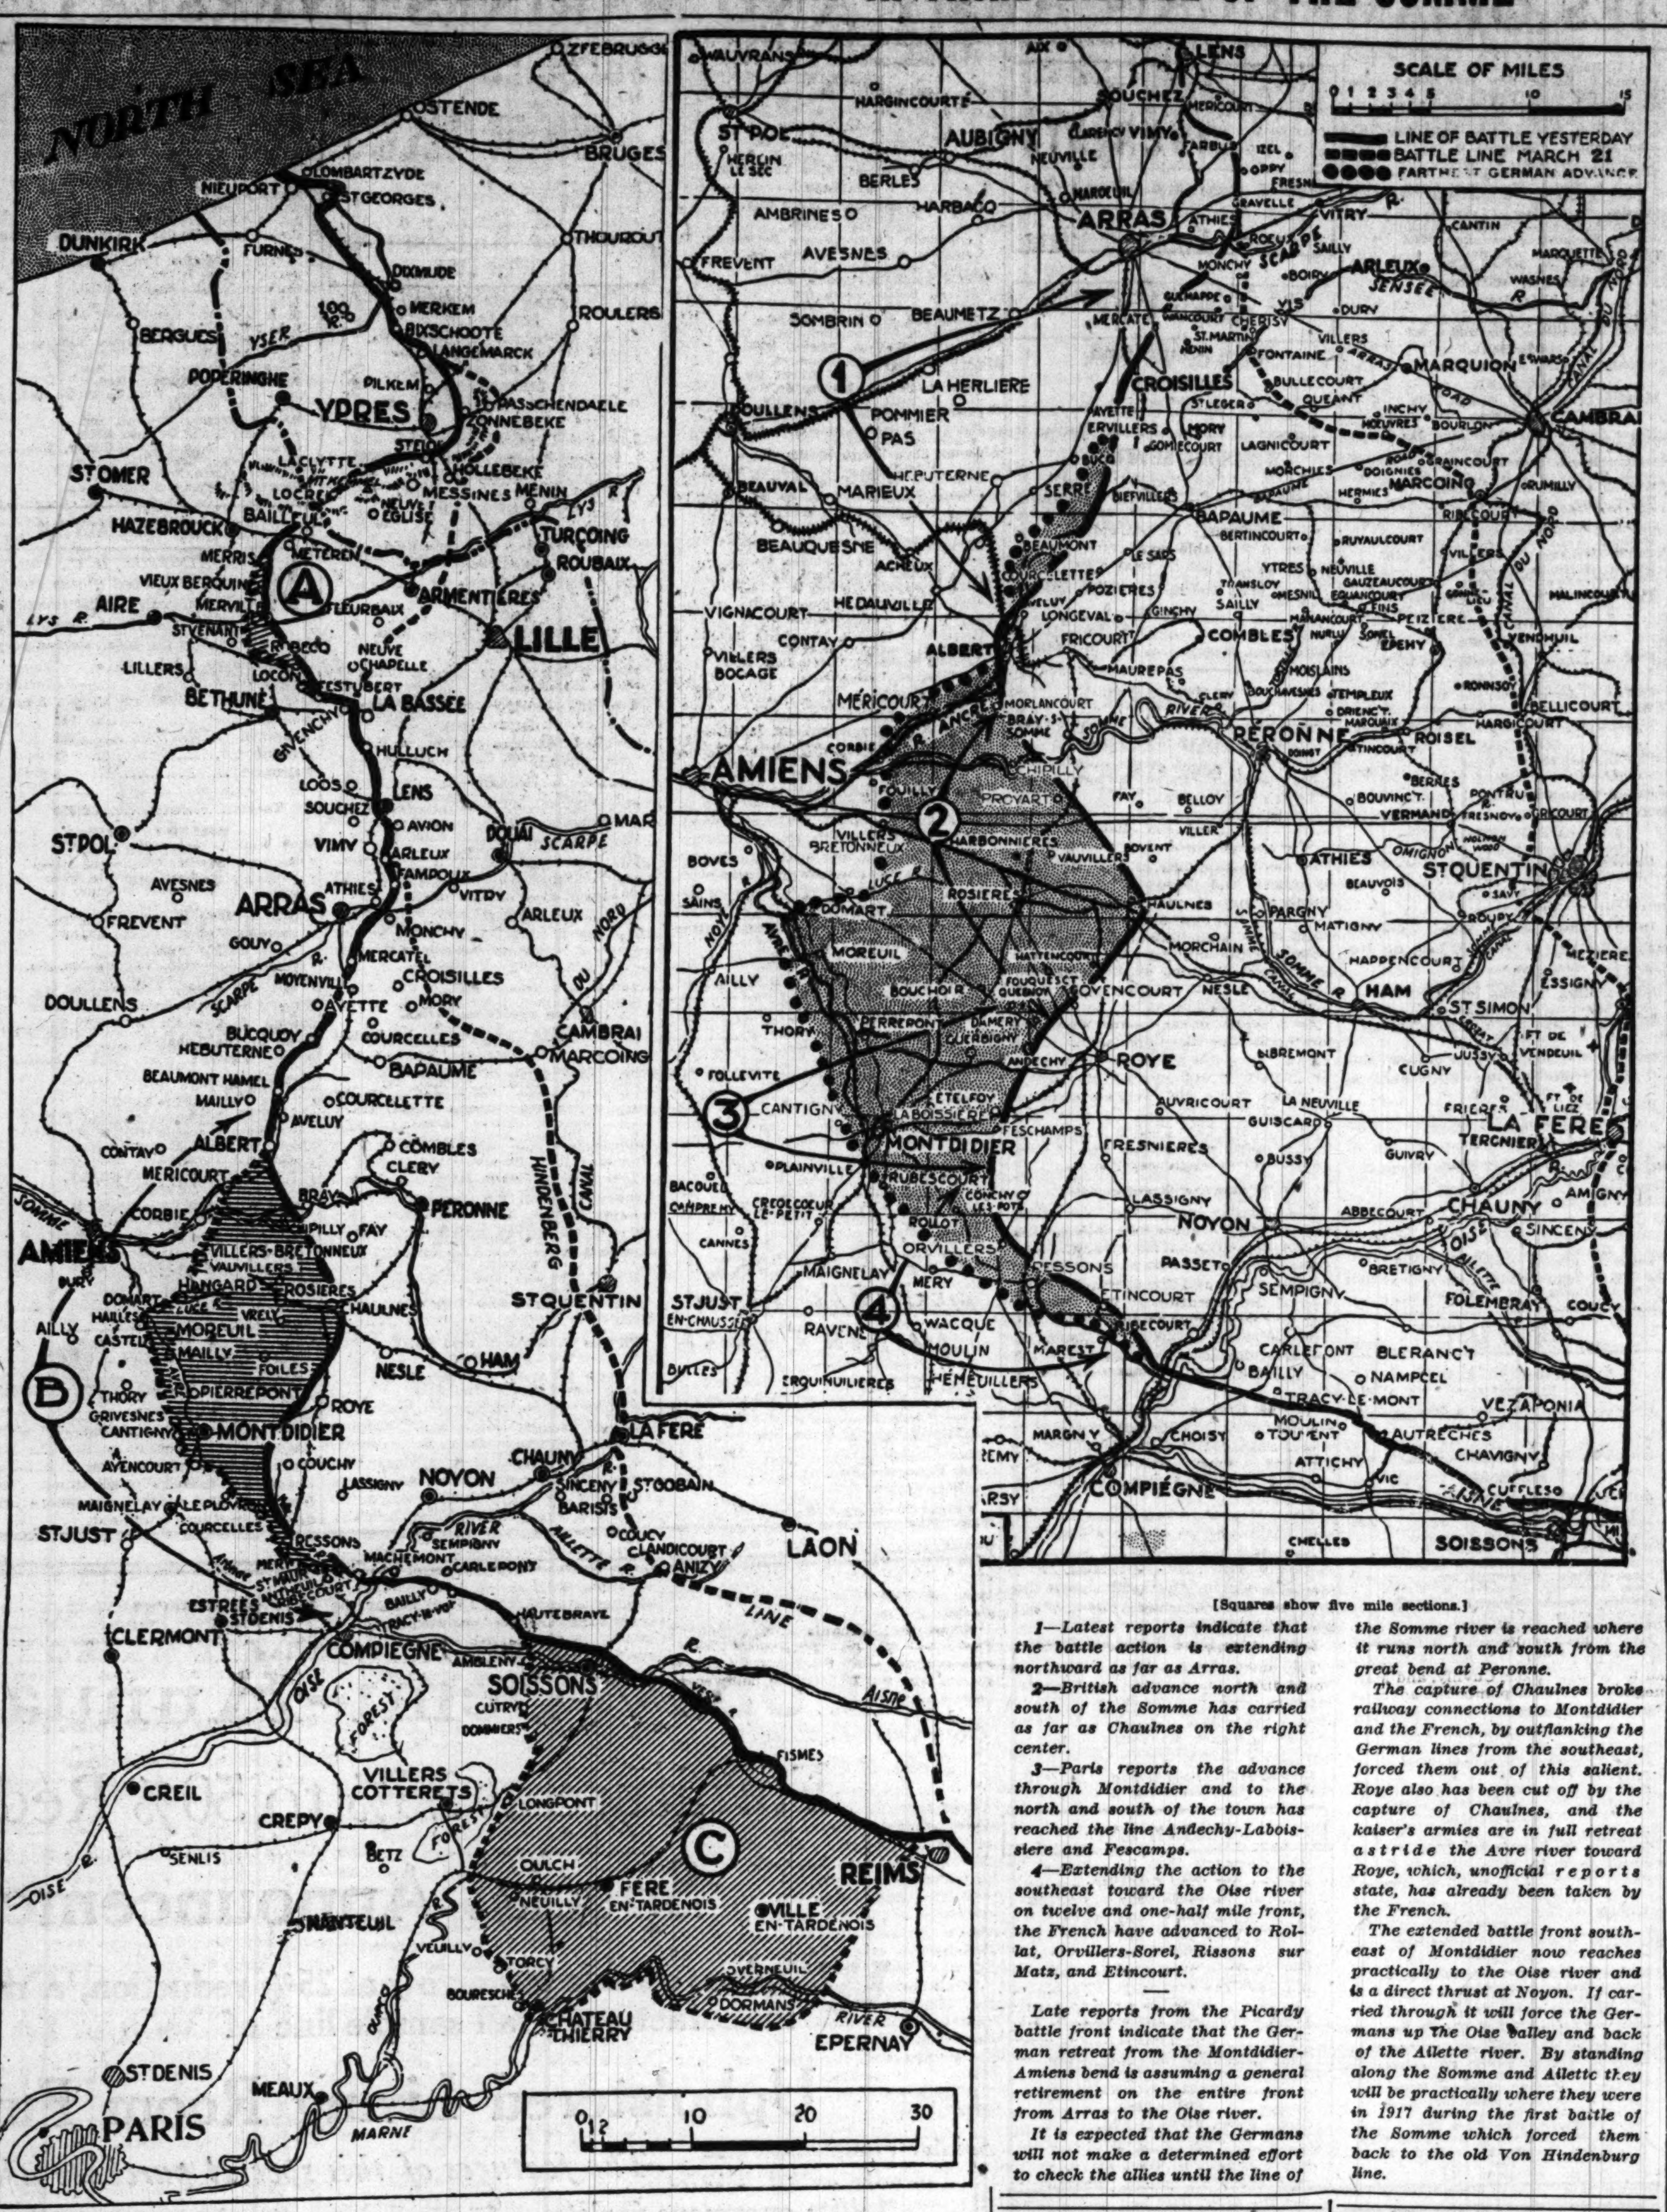
LONDON, Aug. 10.—British casualties published in official lists this week totaled 8,308, the lowest in months. They were divided as follows:

	Killed.	Wounded.	Missing.	Total.
Officers	177	439	49	665
Men	1,425	5,400	818	7,643
Totals	1,602	5,839	867	8,308

GERMANS RETREAT ON WIDE FRONT IN THIRD BATTLE OF THE SOMME



[Squares show five mile sections.]

1—Latest reports indicate that the battle action is extending northward as far as Arras.

2—British advance north and south of the Somme has carried as far as Chaulnes on the right center.

3—Paris reports the advance through Montdidier and to the north and south of the town has reached the line Andechy-Laboissiere and Fescamps.

4—Extending the action to the southeast toward the Oise river on twelve and one-half mile front, the French have advanced to Rollat, Orvillers-Sorel, Rissons sur Matz, and Etincourt.

Late reports from the Picardy battle front indicate that the German retreat from the Montdidier-Amiens bend is assuming a general retirement on the entire front from Arras to the Oise river.

It is expected that the Germans will not make a determined effort to check the allies until the line of the Somme river is reached where it runs north and south from the great bend at Peronne.

The capture of Chaulnes broke railway connections to Montdidier and the French, by outflanking the German lines from the southeast, forced them out of this salient. Roye also has been cut off by the capture of Chaulnes, and the kaiser's armies are in full retreat astride the Avre river toward Roye, which, unofficial reports state, has already been taken by the French.

The extended battle front southeast of Montdidier now reaches practically to the Oise river and is a direct thrust at Noyon. If carried through it will force the Germans up the Oise valley and back of the Ailette river. By standing along the Somme and Ailette they will be practically where they were in 1917 during the first battle of the Somme which forced them back to the old Von Hindenburg line.

A—The Flanders salient.

B—The present battle of the Somme in Picardy, where the allies are smashing the Amiens-Montdidier salient.

C—The Marne salient wiped out by the allies by driving the enemy beyond the Aisne and Vesle rivers.

50,000 GERMANS, 800 GUNS TAKEN IN TWO DRIVES

Lloyd George Praises U. S. Men and Says, 'Keep It Up.'

NEWPORT, England, Aug. 10.—Premier Lloyd George, speaking at a luncheon in the town hall here today, announced that the allies, in the Marne and Somme drives, have captured between 50,000 and 60,000 prisoners and between 800 and 900 cannon.

"The latest advance makes Amiens safe," the premier said, "except for stray long range shells, thanks to the brilliant qualities of our troops and the French, and also the Americans.

"The greatest factor in these successes has been the combined command, but it is not over yet. We must continue our steady blows."

Pays Tribute to Americans.

"The victory was due," the premier continued, "to the brilliant quality of our troops assisted by the French, and I am now glad to say also by American troops."

That great supply of ammunition had been a factor in dealing with the situation, he said, but one of the greatest was the combined command.

"But it isn't over yet," he continued. "The country has got to depend on its resolution. What the country wants is a good, steady heart, free from excitement, not an intermittent or irregular heart, but one of steady blows, and if we keep that I believe we will win."

Men Eager to Fight.

The premier, referring to some domestic difficulties that had to be met, said that after March 21 all the difficulties of finding men for the army had vanished like mist.

"The difficulty now is to stop the men from coming forward from the mines and the munition works," he asserted. "One of the things which contributed to this week's success is the use of tanks, and the men came out of the works where these are made, and, when asked to produce more, said: 'We are going to fight.' It is difficult to beat a country with men like that."

MEDITERRANEAN U-BOAT LOSSES CUT NINE-TENTHS

ROME, Aug. 10.—Admiral Delbono, minister of marine, in an interview here today declared that shipping losses as the result of U-boat operations in Mediterranean and Adriatic waters are only a tenth of what they were last year, thanks to the brilliant achievements of the navy.

"Last year the number of torpedoed ships averaged 5 per cent. This year's average is .5 of 1 per cent," the admiral said.

"Italy sustained the heaviest losses during April, 1917, when seventeen steamers were sunk. Last April only three were lost. In May and June, 1917, twenty were sunk; in the same months this year there were only six.

"Regarding enemy losses, in addition to U-boats, which there is reason to believe were either damaged or sunk, I can positively announce that in the last few months five enemy submarines were sunk and the crews of some captured.

"A few days ago a destroyer engaged and sank a U-boat in the Adriatic. A few days later our submarine F-12 attacked and sank an enemy U-boat, while a destroyer sank a third in a channel much used by allied steamers."

SWEDISH PRESS SPREADS LIBELS ABOUT AMERICA

Branting Tells Why His People Are Blind to U. S. Ideals.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT

[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

Stockholm, Aug. 10.—"It is certainly time that we here in Sweden opened our eyes to what the rest of the world sees and sees with admiration; namely, the strong idealism characterizing the mighty national decision of the United States to erect in the world a safeguarded justice with freedom for all peoples, but not freedom for the mailed fist to strike down the weak who dare to defend their rights."

Thus does Kjalmar Branting vigorously arraign Swedish Germanophils after his return from visiting American troops in France. But his energetic efforts are being rendered ineffective with a considerable portion of the Swedish public by the newspapers frequently printing alleged American lynchings of Germans under heading such as "News from Lynch Law Land." Such reports are greatly injurious.

Rowing all night and avoiding patrol boats, all Aland island recruits summoned to the colors by the Finnish government have escaped to Sweden, where the farmers are receiving them well, giving work to the lads who, technically Finns, are really Swedes of ancient stock.

Scandinavian, Dutch, English, and French Socialist leaders, including Branting, are planning a conference at Copenhagen to outline preparations for an international Socialist conference to be held at Berne next year.

HERE'S GERMAN EXPLANATION OF NEWEST DEFEAT

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 10.—The Anglo-French successes are attributed to their surprise attacks and the presence of a thick fog over the battlefield, according to a Berlin telegram received here quoting a semi-official German news agency.

"Notwithstanding the exceedingly favorable ground for the movement of great masses of troops and the operations of tanks, the initial success of the Anglo-French armies under Field Marshal Haig have not surpassed the limits which usually result from a first day's offensive," the agency declares. "A certain loss in guns and prisoners in such circumstances is unavoidable, but the enemy has not reached any of his strategic goals. His gain of ground is the less important, because it comprises no consolidated system of defense, but was maneuvering ground where the fighting which started March 21 has not yet come to a conclusion."

Another semi-official utterance telegraphed from Berlin says Field Marshal Haig undertook the attack to restore the badly tarnished military prestige of Great Britain and asserts that, "as usual," the brunt of the battle was not borne by the English, but by Canadians and Australians.

"An extremely dense fog the morning of the 8th favored the enemy attack," the statement says. "The fog cloud so densely enveloped the Anglo-French tank squadrons which pushed forward after a sudden and formidable bombardment by artillery, that they could pass unhindered by the German anti-tank fire and partly penetrate into the artillery lines."

WIDOW OF DUBLIN REVOLT VICTIM IS DEPORTED

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Mrs. F. Sheehy Skeffington was deported from Kingstown, Ireland, Friday night. She was in charge of two prison wardresses.

Mrs. Skeffington, who lately visited various parts of the United States, was permitted to return to England on condition that she would not go to Ireland. She arrived in Dublin, however, on Aug. 3, having eluded the authorities, and she was arrested there Thursday. Her husband, formerly editor of the Irish Citizen, was shot and killed by a British officer during the revolt in Dublin early in 1916.

POET AVIATOR TELLS OF RAID MADE ON VIENNA

Watched by Terrified Crowds in Streets of Foe Capital.

ROME, Aug. 10.—Gabriele d'Annunzio, the Italian poet, today described the flight of the Italian air squadron which successfully "bombed" Vienna with manifestoes.

All the machines returned in safety with the exception of one, which was obliged to land near Vienna-Neustadt owing to engine trouble.

There were scenes of wild enthusiasm when Capt. D'Annunzio and his comrades returned. The flight over the Alps was made in a great windstorm and through strong mountain currents at a height of about 10,000 feet.

"Bombs" Convey Warning.

The manifestoes dropped on Vienna contained a warning of what the Italians might do if they saw fit to return on a bombing expedition.

Capt. D'Annunzio gave the following description of the flight of his squadron:

"When we left at 6 o'clock in the morning the weather was splendid, but we soon were enveloped in thick mist. We kept at a height varying from 8,000 feet to 11,000 feet.

"In crossing our frontier, I was deeply affected at looking down upon Cividale and the wide stretches of our country that have been held for the last nine months by the enemy.

Crowds in a Panic.

"We reached Vienna about 9 o'clock in the morning and descended to within 1,500 feet. The people in the streets were at first terrified and fled in panic until they saw that we were throwing out only manifestoes. Then crowds assembled and watched us with intense curiosity.

"I particularly wished to approach close to the museum that contains the authentic image of St. Catherine of Alexandria, and made a detour which permitted observation of this point.

"The weather became bad on our return trip and we experienced dangerous air currents while crossing the Alps. We also were attacked by hostile artillery fire and a flet of hydroplanes, but came through safely by noon of the same day."

ALLIED TROOPS MAKE GAINS ON ITALIAN FRONT

ROME, Aug. 10.—"In Giudicaria and also at Asiago, our troops and the British and French daringly raided the enemy," the war office announced today.

"In Giudicaria on Thursday, we attacked the enemy, having forded the Chiese river.

"In the Daone valley we surprised a large guard on the southern slopes of Dosso Del Morti. Some of the enemy were killed and twenty-one prisoners were taken, in spite of barrage fire and the coming of reinforcements.

"Thursday night British detachments, after damage to the enemy trenches between Canove and Asiago, penetrated eight portions of the line, inflicting heavy losses on the garrison and supports and bringing back 374 prisoners, ten machine guns, four trench mortars, and other material.

"At Monte Sisemol the French, after brief artillery preparation, penetrated an enemy strong point, destroying a good part of the garrison and forcing the rest to surrender. They took 248 prisoners, some trench cannon, and eight machine guns."

ALLIES WIN BY PUTTING WAR ON WHEEL AND WING

See Cavalry of Air and Tanks for All Troops in Near Future.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The victorious allied drive, which is crushing the Germans out of the Amiens salient in Picardy, may mark a complete revolution in offensive warfare, experts declared here tonight.

A special war office report tells a graphic story of how a large number of light, fast tanks—the "whippets"—with strong forces of cavalry and great fleets of airplanes, smashed their way deep into the German lines Thursday and again on Friday.

The airmen rendered remarkable assistance to the tanks, guiding them, screening them with smoke bombs and even carrying ammunition to them.

Auto for Every Soldier.

The military correspondent of the Times, referring to the remarkable speed developed by the whippets in keeping pace with the cavalry, foresees a future, when every heavy infantryman will have a small, light tank, while swarms of airmen will take the place of the cavalry and light infantry.

The extraordinary employment of aircraft in pursuit of the enemy is also remarked. The services they rendered obviously were of the utmost military value, which it is hoped is not out of proportion to the losses.

The war office statement on the operations of the special "speed branches" of the army follows:

"On Aug. 8 our airplane squadrons coöperated with other arms on the battle front throughout the day. The line reached by our attacking infantry was reported by our contact airplanes. The positions of the hostile artillery in action and columns of German infantry and transport on the march were signaled to our guns by our artillery machines.

"Other machines supplied our advance troops with ammunition from the air.

Airmen Guide Tanks.

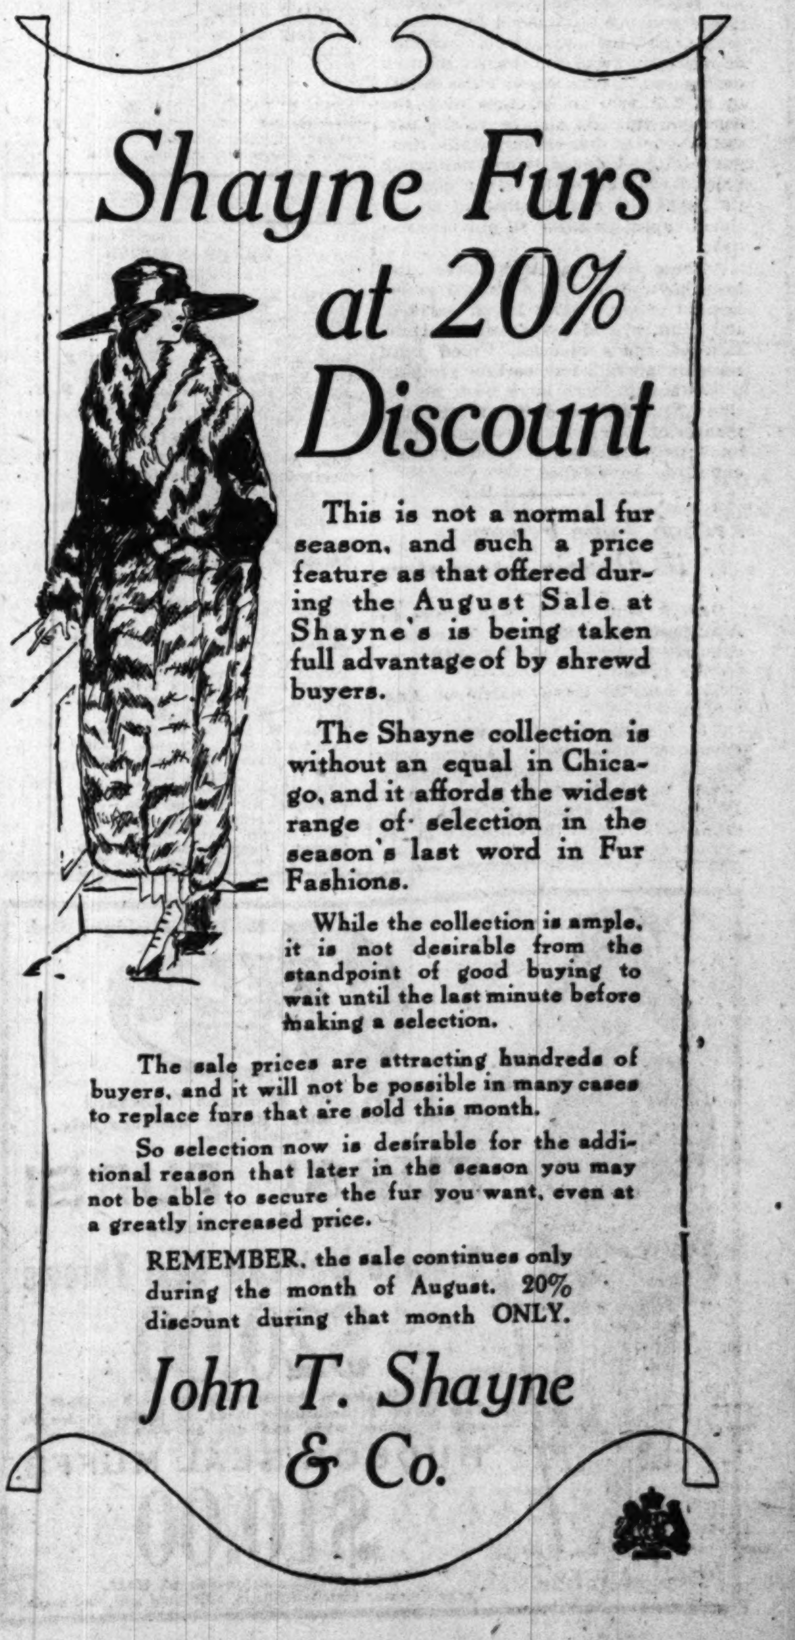
"Coöperation with the tanks was carried out systematically. Our machines assisted the tank crews with information, attacked strong points and other opposition with bombs and machine gun fire, and by dropping smoke bombs along the line of their advance assisted to conceal the approach of the tanks from the enemy.

"Our contact machines working with the cavalry rendered valuable services. Flying low in front of our advancing line, our fighting squadrons shot at and bombed the enemy in his retreat, causing havoc among the masses of hostile troops and transport on roads congested with traffic.

"Our bombing squadrons flying a few hundred feet from the ground attacked trains, railway junctions, and bridges.

"Forty-eight hostile machines are reported as destroyed by our airplanes and seventeen others were driven down out of control. Five hostile balloons were shot down in flames.

"Fifty of our own machines are missing, most of these casualties being due to fire from the ground. One of our night flying machines also failed to return."



Shayne Furs at 20% Discount

This is not a normal fur season, and such a price feature as that offered during the August Sale at Shayne's is being taken full advantage of by shrewd buyers.

The Shayne collection is without an equal in Chicago, and it affords the widest range of selection in the season's last word in Fur Fashions.

While the collection is ample, it is not desirable from the standpoint of good buying to wait until the last minute before making a selection.

The sale prices are attracting hundreds of buyers, and it will not be possible in many cases to replace furs that are sold this month.

So selection now is desirable for the additional reason that later in the season you may not be able to secure the fur you want, even at a greatly increased price.

REMEMBER, the sale continues only during the month of August. 20% discount during that month ONLY.

NO 1918 NATIONAL BANK FAILURES; PROFITS LARGE

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—There has not been a single national bank failure in the United States during the first seven months of 1918, according to a statement today by John Skelton Williams, controller of the currency. This record has only been equaled once since 1870. That was in 1881.

"The compilation of the returns for the last six months," Mr. Williams said, "will not be finished for several weeks, but the analysis of earnings of national banks for the six months ending Jan. 1, 1918, shows gross profits of $392,742,000, an increase over the corresponding six months in the previous year of $62,448,000, while their net profits amounted to approximately $100,000,000, or nearly 20 per cent on the aggregate capital stock of all national banks, excelling all previous records.

"These large earnings have also been coincident with a radical reduction in interest rates in all parts of the country, and the practical extinction of usury charges, which until recently prevailed in certain sections.

"Although there have been no national bank failures during these seven months of 1918, twenty-two state banks and trust companies in fourteen different states have failed."

French Take Prisoners in Albania Encounters

PARIS, Aug. 10.—French forces in Albania took prisoners in patrol encounters yesterday, the war office reported tonight.

The statement under date of Aug. 9 says:

"In Albania there have been patrol encounters that yielded us some prisoners. Our aviators have bombarded enemy encampments in the region of Pogradek and British aviators have dropped bombs on the railroads in the region of Ceres."

BAVARIA ANGRY AT FOOD GREED OF PRUSSIANS

Moves to Stop Monopoly of Necessities to Feed Berlin.

AMSTERDAM, July 30.—[Delayed.]—Stringent measures have been taken in Bavaria to prevent the country being drained of all foodstuffs by hungry Prussians.

In six months the Bavarian authorities, acting under military law, seized over 38,000 parcels of hand baggage containing 133,203 dozens of eggs and 262,500 pounds of butter, cheese, flour, and meal. This was only a result of random examinations of baggage carried by holiday makers and other travelers. Far more severe restrictions are now to be imposed.

Partiality for Berlin.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—A bitter newspaper controversy has arisen in Germany over the distribution of food, according to an official dispatch today from Switzerland. The discussion arose from the granting to the population of Berlin a supplementary ration of fifty grammes, and this has provoked keen discontent not only in Bavaria and Saxony but even in Prussia and above all in agricultural districts.

The Berlin Morgen Post says: "The enemy is following with intense interest the success of the starvation war that was brought against us. Do not let us give him the pleasure of proving that a mouthful of bread more suffices to mobilize Bavaria and Saxony against Berlin and that Bavaria and Saxony can even find allies in Prussia against the capital of the kingdom. Is it really necessary to provide such a spectacle for the enemy and thus to supply his own mill with water as it were? It is encouraging him to continue the war of starvation and to tighten the blockade."

The Kreuz Zeitung says that the best way of playing the enemy's game is to give privileges to Berlin. The economical distress is just as acute in Saxony as in Hamburg, for example, or in the Westphalen Rhenish district as Berlin.

Bread Rations Increased.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—It is officially reported from Berlin that the bread ration in the German capital will be increased by 100 grammes (about 3½ ounces) weekly, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Copenhagen. The price has also been raised by 12 pfennig. The ration will now be 1,850 grammes weekly as compared with 1,950 in August last year.

SEVEN CHICAGO NAMES ON DAY'S CASUALTY LIST

Two Die of Wounds, Two Wounded, and Three Missing.

Seven Chicagoans were named in the official casualty lists of yesterday. Two died of wounds, two were wounded severely, and three were missing in action. Six were members of the army and the seventh was a marine.

Through an unexplained error in the war department an eighth Chicagoan—Lieut. James H. Moore of 3434 Oak Park avenue, Berwyn, was listed as killed in action in France, but Lieut. Moore is stationed at Camp Grant, where he was found yesterday alive and well.

Former Hoyne Aid Wounded.

Private Harry A. Bailey, marine, reported severely wounded, was formerly an assistant state's attorney in the office of Maclay Hoyne. He had been there four years, but resigned to go to France a few days after the United States entered the war. He was born in Princeton, Mo., where his parents still live.

"Mr. Bailey was one of our most capable and efficient assistants," said First Assistant State's Attorney Michael F. Sullivan. "He was intensely patriotic and it is with great sorrow that this office learns of his injury. We earnestly hope for his speedy recovery."

Bailey roomed for a number of years with Irwin N. Walker, another assistant state's attorney, who was informed of his injuries by Bailey's relatives. His is the first casualty among men from the state's attorney's office, eleven of whom are now in the military service of the United States.

Dies of Wounds.

Private Alabel Blumenthal, died of wounds, was among the first Chicago selective service men to go to France. Two of his brothers are in the service. Blumenthal went to Camp Grant last September and was assigned to the medical section of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth infantry. He was formerly an accountant with Montgomery Ward & Co. His widow, Mrs. Lena Blumenthal, lives at 6130 Evans avenue.

Private Charles Langendorf of 2451 West Division street was listed yesterday as died of wounds, but Charles Langendorf, proprietor of a bakery at that address, does not believe it is his son. His son's name is Samuel and he is a member of Company M, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh infantry. He entered the national army last September.

Missing in Action.

Private Henry Rothermal, missing in action, is a son of Mrs. Anna Rothermal of 465 West Twenty-fifth street. Yesterday was his twenty-first birthday. He enlisted in the Eighteenth United States infantry two years ago. He served through the Mexican campaign and was among the first of the American soldiers to go to France. He was born here and was graduated from St. Anthony's parochial school at Twenty-ninth and Wallace streets.

Capt. George H. Butler, wounded severely, is 25 years old and a son of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert W. Butler of 5410 Giddings street. He was a graduate of the First Officers' Training Camp at Fort Leavenworth, Kas. According to unofficial information received by his father, Capt. Butler was struck by shrapnel while leading a machine gun unit of the Thirty-eighth infantry against the enemy. A brother, Lieut. Walter Carter Butler, is an instructor at the school of fire, Fort Sill, Okla. The father is a realty broker, with offices at 105 North Clark street.

In Early Draft.

Corporal Thomas J. Byrne, missing in action, of 10502 Ewing avenue, South Chicago, was 24 years old and was among the first national army men to be sent fro mthat district to Camp Grant. His father is an engineer for the Illinois Steel company.

Private Alva Knight Dunlap, a son of Mrs. L. Dunlap, a widow, of 152 North Hamlin avenue, has been killed in action. He ran away in April, 1917, and enlisted in Company L, Eighteenth United States army regiment, under the name of "Albert Patrick of Tulsa." A month later he was in France, where he wrote his mother explaining his change in names. Last Wednesday "Albert Patrick of Tulsa" was listed in the official casualties as killed in action.

"He gave his life for his country and humanity and I want his right name known that he may have credit for his act," said Mrs. Dunlap last night.

The complete Chicago casualties will be found in the official lists.

POLAND SHRINKS THREE MILLION UNDER HUN YOKE

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—The population of Poland has decreased by more than 3,000,000 since the commencement of the war, according to an official dispatch from Copenhagen today. It says:

"According to the Polish papers, the population of Poland, which before the war was about 14,700,000, has fallen to 11,500,000. This decrease is due, firstly, to the high mortality, which has considerably augmented, and secondly to the expatriation of numerous Poles, who have left their country on account of the unbearable conditions of life imposed upon them under German domination."

BULGARS, WEARY OF THE WAR, MAY DESERT KAISER

Rows Among Allies of Germans Likely to Bring Break.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Revolt in Bulgaria and defection from the German alliance is believed possible and perhaps impending.

High entente officials here are daily expecting Bulgaria to snap the weakening strings that have tied her to the German alliance for four weary years with little but increasing prospects of defeat as compensation.

An armistice until the end of the war rather than a separate peace between Bulgaria and the allies is likely, entente officials say. Difficulties in framing a separate peace in the Balkans which would satisfy Serbia, Greece, and Italy are almost insurmountable until the general peace conference meets to remake the map of Europe.

Straws Pointing Way.

Latest developments pointing toward Bulgaria's defection are:

1. German setbacks on the western front foreshadowing ultimate defeat for the central powers.
2. Czar Ferdinand's hasty trip to Germany.
3. Wildest disorder and popular ill feeling toward the war party in Bulgaria.
4. Hatred of Turkey lately revived over territorial differences.
5. Germany's noncommittal attitude toward Bulgaria's demand for concessions against Turkey.

Germany's visible weakening on the western front is hastening Bulgaria's decision. Having little more to gain in the war, Bulgaria has been closely watching the turn of events since America entered the war. Now that Germany appears likely to be defeated she wants to break away from the central powers before the crash comes.

Agents Feel Out Allies.

Bulgarian agents have recently visited Switzerland and other neutral nations on peace missions and to feel out sentiment toward Bulgaria.

King Ferdinand is trying to wrest concessions and promises from Germany in the hope of placating his people and inducing them to continue the war. Open revolt at home, however, may take things entirely out of Ferdinand's hands, and it is even possible that a repetition of the Russian revolution might occur.

Wild disorder, famine, and want is provoking the Bulgarian populace. The armies, under control of German officers, is taking the best of everything without returning compensation in the form of victory.

Turkey meanwhile is pressing Germany to give back territory taken from her by Bulgaria in the Balkan wars, and failure of Germany to commit herself on this question is adding to Bulgaria's distrust of Prussian statesmen.

Knowledge that Greece is continuing to mobilize its army and has now close to 200,000 men who will soon be equipped for a long and strenuous campaign, and the recent rout of the Austrians by the Italians has blasted the hope of support from the dual monarchy.

HEAT SLIPS BACK FOR A NEW VISIT

Chicago's heat wave came back to some extent yesterday. After a day of comfort Friday the thermometer crept upward during the day until it reached 91 degrees.

There probably will be little or no relief today. The forecast includes the possibility of showers, which may cool the atmosphere a little, but no decided change is expected. The southerly winds will continue and the weather bureau expects the mercury to reach 90 degrees.

DEVILISH TRAPS SET FOR YANKS BY FLEEING FOE

Captured Order Shows Third German Line Behind Aisne.

BY EDWIN L. JAMES.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable. [Copyright: 1918.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY, Aug. 10, 9 a. m.—From the body of a German officer who led one of yesterday's attacks was taken an order showing that the Germans are basing their operations on the Soissons-Reims front on three lines—the first line along the Vesle, the second line along the heights between the Vesle and the Aisne, and the third behind the Aisne. The order instructed troops along the Vesle to hold at all costs for the present. Prisoners stated they had been order to hold along the Vesle until the Aisne defenses had been prepared.

Allied plans in this sector are in the making. It is not now essential to our plans to hold the region between the Vesle and the Aisne. An attempt against determined German resistance would not be worth the taking at this stage. But affairs are going to shape themselves so that the Germans will go back of the Aisne when the proper time comes.

Yanks Improve Positions.

It is entirely probable that the moves to be made on the Vesle line may be influenced by the outcome of the new allied drive in the region of Amiens. In the meantime Americans are steadily bettering their positions north of the Vesle to be ready for what task may be given them to do.

As our engineers clean up the territory from which Germans retreated they continue to find hundreds of infernal machines of all sorts. The favorite trick is to arrange branches of trees looking like camouflage in the doorway of a dugout so that when brushed aside they set off mines. Bombs of great strength have been found in rubbish piles which would nearly always be burned.

Boards were arranged on areaways so that the weight of a man would detonate the charge. In a number of instances a large number of big shells had been placed in pockets under the roads arranged so that the weight of a passing camion would explode them.

Food and Water Poisoned.

The most novel infernal device was an arrangement of barbed wire entanglements so that attacking troops would explode mines. Not only did the Germans leave their infernal machines behind but poisoned food and water also marked the departing trail of the hating Hun.

These methods of Hun warfare were fortunately early discovered, thanks largely to previous experience of French fighters, and such effective methods have been taken against them that little losses have been caused to Americans. The following is a warning bulletin issued to all our soldiers on this front:

"Ruses, traps, and infernal devices are employed by the enemy during his retreat. Characteristic devices used by the enemy during his retreat between the Artois and the Aisne included:

"First, within dugouts strings that were attached to branches apparently used to camouflage the entrance were attached to mines. Detonators in charcoal or rubbish heaps. Fuses connected with explosive charges fastened in stoves or fireplaces. Protruding nails when stepped on exploded mines. Shovels, picks, etc., apparently stuck at random into a heap of earth, when removed set off mines. A loose board, step, or stairway, when stepped upon, set off an explosion.

Danger on All Sides.

"Second, along the roads, slight depression caused by the passage of vehicles would explode a detonator in a mine gallery under the road where 150 or 200 shells were located.

"Three, in barbed wire entanglements—wires concealed in grass explode mines.

"Four, houses—intact houses remaining among others which have been destroyed should be approached or entered with the utmost circumspection.

"Five, stables. Mines were often found under bricks or tiles covered with hay, manure, hay fodder, etc. They should be removed with utmost caution.

"Six, poisoned food. Abandoned food should be carefully inspected and investigated."

HOME NEWS

Roosevelt Asks People of America to Send Papers to Wounded in France.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Col. Theodore Roosevelt asked today for newspapers to be sent to American wounded soldiers in hospitals in France. He issued this appeal in response to a letter from a woman serving in the Red Cross military hospital No. 1 at Neuilly.

"I have just received," he said, "a letter from a lady with two sons at the front and who herself is in Paris on war work. She writes as follows:

"'Besides my other work here I have been going to the Neuilly hospital every morning for two hours to distribute American newspapers to the wounded just arrived from the front. It is a terrible and touching sight. The wards are already so full that all the halls are lined with the men on stretchers waiting to have their wounds dressed. They are splendidly brave and uncomplaining and pathetically eager for home news. There is nothing they wish more than the home newspapers. I wonder if you could suggest to some to send papers to the American Red Cross, military hospital No. 1, Neuilly, Seine, Paris. Not old papers they have read and are ready to throw away but daily, regularly, the last papers.'

WILSON NAMES VARDAMAN AS "UNDESIRABLE"

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 10.—President Wilson, through a letter to Myron McNeil, an attorney of Hazelhurst, Miss., has declared that should the voters of Mississippi reëlect Senator James K. Vardaman to the United States senate he would regard "their action as a condemnation of my administration," as Senator Vardaman "has been conspicuous among the Democrats in the senate for his opposition to the administration."

The president's letter, which was made public here tonight, follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 23d of July, let me say that it is always with the utmost hesitation that I venture to express an opinion about candidates for election either to the senate or to the house, because I feel that it is not from any point of view my privilege to suggest to the voters of a state what their action shall be.

"But upon questions of fact I am at liberty to speak. You call my attention to certain statements made on behalf of Senator Vardaman, in which an effort is made to create the impression that I would not regard the return of Senator Vardaman to the senate as a verdict against the present administration. Such statements are calculated to put a very false face upon Senator Vardaman's candidacy. Senator Vardaman has been conspicuous among the Democrats in the senate for his opposition to the administration.

"If the voters of Mississippi should again choose him to represent them I not only have no right to object, I would have no right in any way to criticize them.

"But I should be obliged to accept their action as a condemnation of my administration, and it is only right that they should know this before they act."

GERMAN PRESS PREPARING FOR SHOCK IN RUSSIA

Many Look for Overthrow of Bolsheviki, Berlin Paper Admits.

BULLETIN.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 10.—Gen. Semenoff, the anti-Bolsheviki leader, with the help of Chinese artillery, has defeated the Russian Red Guards on the Chinese frontier and dispersed them, according to a Moscow telegram to the Rhenish Westphalian Gazette of Essen.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The German newspapers today admit that the situation in Russia is so critical that a change of government may come any day, according to a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company.

The Berlin Taeglische Rundschau says that events have developed rapidly in Russia in the last few weeks, and that Germany must be prepared for the overthrow of the Bolshevik government in a few days.

British Plan Reprisals.

In reprisal for the arrest at Moscow of Robert H. B. Lockhart, British consular agent at Moscow, and other British officials, by the Bolsheviki, M. Litvinoff, the Bolshevik emissary in London, has been placed under police supervision, the Daily Mail states.

Mr. Lockhart, six Britishers attached to his staff, and several French diplomatic agents have been arrested in Moscow, says the Daily Mail.

The newspaper attributes to the foreign office a statement that there is no reason to believe it is true that the British at Archangel shot representatives of the soviet, and adds:

"There was some shooting before Archangel incidental to the landing operations, but this could only have been in reply to shots fired at our forces by the Bolshevik forces. The arrest of Lockhart is, of coure, an act of hostility in international law, and will be so regarded by us. It is possibly a reprisal for our landing at Archangel an din the Murmansk region."

British Consul Also Seized.

The Evening News says that J. O. Wardrop, the British consul at Moscow, was arrested with Lockhart. Lockhart and Wardrop remained in Moscow when the diplomatic staff went to Archangel.

British government advices, through Swedish channels, say that the reason given for the arrest of British consuls at Moscow is that members of the soviet government were said to have been shot at Archangel.

The British government has demanded the release of Lockhart, but no immediate threatening steps will be taken.

Lord Robert Cecil, under secretary of state for foreign affairs, commenting on the situation, said:

"If there was an organized government in Moscow, of course, it would mean war. But as there is no real government, no immediate steps will be taken affecting the Bolsheviki."

Jaroslav Thousands Homeless.

The story of the tragic fate of the Russian city of Jaroslav as transmitted to the Frankfort Zeitung from its Moscow correspondent reads like medieval romance. Jaroslav, famous for its splendid churches and monasteries, was almost completely destroyed after a siege of twelve days by the Bolsheviki and thousands are homeless.

CZECHO-SLOVAK REPUBLIC NEXT LIBERTY CHILD?

Bohemia and Moravia Are Ripe for Revolt Against Austria.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—A revolution in Bohemia and Moravia as an outcome of which a provisional government will be set up was predicted in a statement today by the Czecho-Slovak national council.

The statement describes the Austrian government's policy towards Bohemia as one that has attempted to smother the aspirations of the race towards independence. All the political parties of the Czecho-Slovaks have been merged into one, the Czech democratic party of independence, except the Agrarian, composed of farmers, and the two Socialist organizations, which also have combined to form the Czech Socialist party. All of these parties, however, demand the complete independence of their nation, and their representatives in the Vienna parliament have on all occasions acted as one body.

"The policy of the Austrian government," the statement says, "as regards Bohemia has reverted once more to police rule, as practiced during the first years of the war. For a year after the outbreak of the Russian revolution efforts were made to conciliate the Czechs by a pardon of their leaders and by a moderation of the oppressive measures against the press and the right of public meeting. Since this policy had no success, a régime of oppression has again been put in force."

Dr. Karel Kramer, once imprisoned and sentenced to death for treason, is chairman of the democratic party of independence and is considered likely to be the president if the Czecho-Slovaks by revolution set up a democratic government.

HUN DESTROYER SUNK BY A MINE OFF ZEEBRUGGE

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A German destroyer was sunk eight miles off Zeebrugge yesterday, according to an official statement issued by the admiralty today. The statement says that it is probable the destroyer was sunk by striking a British mine. The statement read:

"During a reconnaissance carried out yesterday by royal air force contingents working in conjunction with the navy, a German destroyer was observed to be sinking eight miles northwest of Zeebrugge. This destroyer was in all probability sunk by a British mine.

"Enemy mine sweepers operating off Zeebrugge were heavily bombarded by the British aircraft."

BRITAIN HALTS KERENSKY TOUR FOR U. S. DOLLARS

They Don't Exactly Love Former Premier Over There, Apparently.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable. [Copyright: 1918.]

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The sojourn in England of former Premier Kerensky of Russia is likely to be longer than was originally intended, owing to his inability to obtain a passport for a private and highly profitable lecturing tour in America. He has received an offer of flattering terms from an American impresario to tour the states as a lecturer.

The contract specifies a fee of $1,500 for each lecture for a series of ten, and half that amount for a further forty or fifty lectures. The amount promised includes railway and hotel expenses and the services of a secretary and translator.

Though Kerensky's credit in his own country is low, according to the British view, the Daily Chronicle remarks that his drawing power is evidently high in America, judging by the bait thus thrown to him from the other side of the Atlantic.

English View of Kerensky.

Kerensky's retention here is warmly approved by those best acquainted with his record. The charges against him are thus summed up: Kerensky is of German extraction, but took the name of his stepfather. Before the revolution he was a pacifist and said he did not regard the Germans as enemies. At a great meeting of the socialistic revolutionary party he advocated immediate peace without annexations; when minister of justice he issued a decree which destroyed the Russian armies, robbed the allies of victory last year, and is responsible for the deaths of several hundred thousand men. He arranged a welcome for Lenine, and Trotsky, and Kamenoff, who, people here believe, were sent into Russia by Germany to spread Bolshevism. He was closely associated with German spies, and especially with Stamm, their head, although warned against them.

Hated by Cossacks?

The opinion is expressed here that if the allies have anything to do with a man who is "loathed by all friends of order in Russia," they will injure themselves seriously in the eyes of the latter. A Siberian Cossack is quoted as saying that if Kerensky appeared with allied forces in Siberia the Cossacks would fight against such forces.

MARINES CRUSH HUN WAVES IN HELLISH FIGHT

Gen. Barnett Has Report on Heroic Belleau Wood Battle.

The story of the taking of Belleau wood and Bouresches at Chateau Thierry by the American marines—a sort of curtain raiser to the feats of arms which Uncle Sam's boys have since performed—has been told briefly, but thrilling and authentic details are embodied in a letter from France just received by Maj. Gen. George Barnett, commandant of the United States marine corps. The committee on public information gave out this letter last evening in Washington, telling what the marines did in the early June days.

We have all been under a terrific drive from the time we left our rest area on May 30 and left our trucks and went into the line the afternoon of June 1. Holcomb's battalion was unloaded just in rear of the support position to which our brigade was assigned and his company commanders got part of their orders while their men were disembarking, and then they deployed and went in.

The strain accumulated like a snowball running down hill until we were pulled out temporarily on the 15th, and at times in that long stretch it looked as though the elastic backbone of the men and officers could not stand another tug, but they were always ready on an instant's notice to deliver a new attack or stop a new counter attack.

Lives Up to Traditions.

I feel I can say without boasting that the marine brigade not only lived up to the best traditions of our service, but even surpassed them at times, because we never faced such odds and never were confronted by such a crisis.

We left our rest area at 4 a. m., May 31, in camions (motor trucks), twenty to thirty in a camion, having bivouacked the night before, as we had expected to leave at 6 and again at 10 that night. We took a route that skirted within fifteen kilometers of Paris and when we reached those villages we realized that we were really on our way.

Our other villages had been drab, primitive little villages, where we had comfortable billets and a simple hospitality. Here we found beautiful little towns with charming villas, blooming gardens, and French who had that unconquerable gayety of the Parisian, and they lined the roads and threw flowers into the trucks or handed them to the men, and waved American flags at us.

Moved Men's Hearts.

It was a wonderful transformation, and the men responded to it. Then, as we neared Meaux, we saw our first fugitives on a road that was a living stream of troops in camions, guns, and trains hurrying to the front. And the refugees went straight to the heart of us.

When you saw old farm wagons lumbering along with the chickens and geese swung beneath in coops, laden down with what they could salvage, cattle driven by boys of 9 or 10 years, little tots trotting along at their mothers' skirts, tired out but never a tear or whimper, saw other groups camping out on the road for the night, there was the other side, the side that I think fired the men to do what they did later.

Aged Woman on Load.

I saw one wagon coming along, towering to the top with boxes and mattresses, and on the top mattress was a white haired old lady who would have graced any home, dressed in her best, and with a dignity that blotted out the crude load and made you think of nothing but a silver haired old lady, who was the spirit of a brave people that met disaster with dignity.

Meaux was crowded with them, but we had learned by that time that the work of getting them into new homes was well organized, and we knew that the camions that were rushing our division up to the lines would pick up many of them on the return.

Up from Meaux the road went straight to the front with glimpses of the Marne. And it was a living road of war, troops on foot and in the lumbering camions. French dragoons trotting by them with their lances at rest and the officers as trim as though they had just stepped out of barracks; trains, ambulances, guns from the 75s to the 210s, staff cars whizzed by, and a trail of dust that coated the men in the camions until they looked like mummies.

It was late in the evening when we were diverted to the right of our first destination. It was midnight when our First battalion halted in their trucks at a point seven kilometers back of where we finally went into line and officers and men bivouacked on the roadside or in the fields.

We found orders to throw us into line that night, but two of our battalions had been held up, the men were sadly in need of rest, for they had practically no sleep for two nights, and it was finally decided by the French to put us in the next afternoon. And Holcomb's battalion arrived just in time the next afternoon, so that the order could be carried out by rushing their trucks close up to our line and deploying them out from the trucks to their positions.

"Boche Was Coming."

So it was June 1 when we took up the support line with French troops, hard pressed by the Boche, holding the line out in front. The news was that the Boche was coming. Our first P. C. (post command) was in the outer edge of a strip of woods that is now two kilometers in rear, with as much protection from any kind of fire as a spot in the speedway. But from what the French told us the Boche guns had got up in small numbers and that in their fights the Boche had fought with machine guns, a prodigious quantity of them, and grenades.

Our position then linked up on the left in front of Champillon with the Fifth, who in turn had the Twenty-third on their left. The Fifth had Wise's battalion in line, while we had the First and Second, with Sibley in support. On our right were the French. The next day, the 2d, the French began to drop back, tired out and outnumbered, and that afternoon, by prearranged plan, they were to pass through and our line was to become the front line.

In the meantime to close a gap between us and the Fifth we had put three of our reserve companies into line on the left, and that afternoon the Sixth held a front of seven kilometers with one company as regimental reserve.

Box Seat at Attack.

We had dropped back from our too close to nature P. C. and installed ourselves in a house in La Voie Chatel, a little village between Champillon and Lucy-le-Bocage. From one side we had observation of the north, and when the Germans attacked at 5 p. m. we had a box seat.

They were driving at Hill 165 from the N. and N. E. and they came out, on a wonderfully clear day, in two columns across a wheat field. From our distance it looked flat and green as a baseball field, set between a row of woods on the farther side and woods and a ravine on the near side.

We could see the two thin brown columns advancing in perfect order until two-thirds of the columns, we judged, were in view. The rifle and machine fire were incessant and overhead the shrapnel was bursting. Then the shrapnel came on the target at each shot. It broke just over and just ahead of those columns and then the next bursts sprayed over the very green in which we could see the columns moving.

White Daisy Shrapnel.

It seemed for all the world that the green field had burst out in patches of white daisies where those columns were doggedly moving. And it did again and again. No barrage, but with the skill and accuracy of a cat playing with two brown mice that she could reach and mutilate at will and without any hurry. The white patches would roll away and we could see that some of the columns were still there, slowed up, and it seemed perfect suicide for them to try.

You couldn't begrudge a tribute to their pluck at that.

Then, under that deadly fire and the barrage of rifle and machine gun fire, the Boche stopped. It was too much for any men. They burrowed in or broke to the cover of woods, and you could follow them by the ripples of the green wheat as they raced for cover. The Fifth bore the brunt of it and on our left the men raked the woods and ravines to stop the Boche at his favorite trick of infiltrating through.

An aeroplane was overhead checking up on our artillery fire, and when the shrapnel laid down on those columns just as an elephant would lay down on a ton of hay, the French aviator signaled back to our lines "Bravo!"

Rifles Surprise to French.

The French who were in support of the Fifth and at one time thrown into the line could not and cannot today grasp the rifle fire of the men. That men should fire deliberately and use their sights, and adjust their range, was beyond their experience.

The rifle fire certainly figured heavily in the toll we took, and it must have had a telling effect on the morale of the Boche, for it was something they had not counted on. As a matter of fact, after pushing back the weakened French and then running up against a stone wall defense, they were literally up in the air and more than stopped. We found that out later from prisoners, for the Germans never knew we were in the front line when they made that attack. They were absolutely mystified at the manner in which the defense had stiffened up until they found that our troops were in line.

Surprise Raid on Huns.

The next day Wise's outfit pulled a spectacular stunt in broad daylight. They spotted a machine gun out in front, called for a barrage, swept out behind it, killed or wounded every man in the crew and disabled the gun. They got back O. K., and then the Boche launched a counter attack that was smashed up. For the next few days we were busy pushing out small posts to locate the enemy and to reoccupy such strong points as were beyond the main line assigned us. While it had all been prearranged, our people were anxious to recover what they could without precipitating an engagement of some of the ground evacuated by the French.

The real fireworks broke on June 6 when a general advance on the brigade front to straighten out the lines and recover territory was decided on. In the meantime the Twenty-third had been brought in from the left and put on our right, Holcomb's flank. Our division sector had been shortened to about the front that the Sixth had held and we had two battalions of the Fifth and two of the Sixth in line.

Over the Top.

At 5 p. m. we started out for our new objectives, on a wonderful day, and the twilight is so long here that it was practically broad daylight.

The eastern edge of the Bois de Belleau and Bouresche were our main objectives, with Torcy and other parts of the Belleau the Fifth's. Sibley's battalion had the advance, with Holcomb's in support. The colonel and Capt. Laspiere, our French adviser, went out to Lucy, the central point behind the advance. Sibley moved out in perfect order, and poor Cole told me the night before they got him that when Holcomb's Ninety-sixth company moved out later and came through the woods and into the wheat fields in four waves it was the most beautiful sight he had ever seen.

The artillery preparation was short and one of the platoons of our machine gun company laid down a barrage. But out in the thick Bois de Belleau liaison was extremely difficult. The woods were alive with machine guns and at times where our lines and those of the Fifth had passed through they soon found Boche and machine guns in their rear.

News by Runner.

The advance on the left was held up by stubborn fighting, but about 9 Sibley sent in a runner with word that his left was advanced as far as his right, that he had reached the northwest edge of the woods, that the worst of the machine gun nests was on a rock plateau near his post command, but that he had surrounded it. In the meantime word came in that Col. Catlin had been wounded, and I felt that the bottom of the war had dropped out.

He had a complete grasp of military situations, was familiar as no one else could have been with what was to be done, and officers and men invariably looked to him, and there seemed no limit to his capacity for work or his ready sympathy with and understanding of his subordinates.

Sniper Hit Colonel.

Capt. Laspierre had gone to report to Feland who was in charge on the left when a shell burst near, and he was evacuated, shocked and gassed. It was a double blow. The colonel had moved a short distance out, as he had planned, from Lucy to watch the first phase. He was standing up in a machine gun pit with his glasses up, when a sniper drilled him clean through the right chest. It was a clean wound and our reports lead us to believe that he will be out by the middle of July if not sooner.

In the meantime, because of the extreme difficulty of liaison and with a dark night closing in, orders went out to consolidate. This came just before we had word from Sibley. It was just 9:45 when word came in that Bouresches had been taken by Robertson's platoon of the 96th, or rather the twenty odd men of his platoon who had managed to break through a heavy machine gun barrage and enter the town.

Hard Work of Consolidation.

One of Sibley's company had been assigned the town, with Holcomb's battalion, to establish the line from there to where the 23d's left flank lay. It had been unable to advance and at the same time keep in touch on its left as ordered. Duncan, hearing, however, that this company was 200 yards in advance [an error], raced ahead with his 96th company and was met by a terrific machine gun barrage from two sides of and from Bouresches. As Robertson told me, he had managed to get part of his platoon through the barrage and looking back, saw Duncan and the rest of the company, charging through the barrage, "go down like flies." Robertson had one half of the line and Duncan half.

Robertson blew his whistle just before this to bring up all of his half of the line, and missed Lieut. Bowling. He passed the word, "Where is Johnny?" and saw Bowling get up, face white with pain, and go stumbling ahead with a bullet in his shoulder. Duncan, the last he saw of him before he was mowed down, had his pipe in his mouth and was carrying a stick. Dental Surgeon Osborne picked Duncan up and with a hospital corpsman had just gained some shelter when a shell wiped all three out.

Brave Orderly Killed.

Just after Robertson gained the town and cleaned out the Boche after street fighting in which his orderly, Private Dunlavy, killed later in the defense of the town, captured and turned on them one of their machine guns, others filtered through, and the 79th company, under Zane. Holcomb was very enthusiastic about Zane's handling of the town.

In the meantime, although the capture of Bouresches was the most spectacular of the first fighting, Sibley was having heavier work in the Bois de Belleau. He reported early that there were many machine guns in the woods. At first prisoners came in early, and the men who brought them back reported that the companies were cleaning up fast with few casualties. Young Timmerman charged one machine gun nest at the point of the bayonet and sent in seventeen prisoners at a clip.

News of Nest.

After the first batches of prisoners came into the courtyard of our post command and stood with hands up in the orthodox kamerad style, and the runners were full of the easy manner in which Sibley was going through the woods, came a message that the woods ahead were full of machine guns and that one, on a rock plateau in the northeastern edge, was especially troublesome, a nest estimated to hold between ten and twelve guns.

Then came word that he had reached the limit of his objective at the edge of the woods, that he had surrounded the machine gun nest, and was awaiting orders. Then came word from the brigade to dig in and consolidate the positions won. Two companies of engineers were placed in Lucy, one for each battalion. We sent out a truck loaded with ammunition and tools to Bouresches, got up our Stokes and one-pounders for Sibley, and Holcomb was ordered to straighten out his line from Bouresches straight down to the Triangle farm, where the 23d rested its left flank.

Princeton Lieutenant Leads.

The truck went out with Lieut. W. B. Moore, the captain of track team, halfback on the football team, and president of the senior class at Princeton last year. The whole road was lighted up by flares and exploding shells and swept by both artillery and heavy machine gun fire. It was a great trip and we had fifty volunteers from the headquarters company, of whom we only sent the necessary crew. When it got back we knew we could hold Bouresches, and the counter attack at 2:30 in the morning, although they got within thirty feet of the town, was smothered by our fire.

Hot Work of Supply.

The 7th was spent in getting rations, water, and ammunition out to both battalions, and the little Ford we have hung onto, although it was twice on the verge of salvage, ran through a period of thirty-six hours over the road to Bouresches in daytime and at night, or to a point from which the stuff could be carried off to the left to the ravine running along the right of Sibley's position.

All that day and the next Sibley's men rushed machine gun nests in hand to hand fighting. The guns were emplaced on crests in the thick woods, on rocky ridges, with fire to all points. Their light guns could easily be moved around to our flanks or rear and the Boche certainly know the art of working through, infiltrating, and opening fire from unexpected quarters.

Many times the groups got a footing on these crests, only to have to fall back in the face of a deadly machine gun and stick grenade fire. It was work of the most reckless courage against heavy odds, and they took their toll of us for every gun captured or disabled. All through this time Sibley had Boche and guns on his flank and in his rear, for the woods were held by both forces, and the liaison on our left had been crippled by the initial advance in which the battalion on his left, Berry's, and his own had to fight their way in the dark, and Berry wounded early in the fight.

Smashed by Cannon.

On the 9th Sibley was withdrawn to a point from which the artillery could hammer away at the machine gun nests, which had been thoroughly located. For an hour fifty American and French batteries of 75s and 155s threw everything they had into those woods on the right. Hughes went in on the 10th and his first message was that the artillery had hammered the Bois de Belleau into mincemeat.

Overton, who had taken over the Seventy-sixth company that day, charged the old rock plateau position in brilliant fashion, killing or capturing every gunner and capturing all the guns, and with few casualties. He "got his" later when the Boches shelled him in his hastily dug in position for forty-eight hours. Hughes captured six minenwerfers, about thirty guns, light and heavy.

The copy of commendations we sent to you will tell you better than anything else the story of Sibley's magnificent work before the artillery preparation made the task an easier one.

Into Certain Death.

Young Robinson charged into certain death to take one nest, and a string of bullets caught him full in the breast. Young Roberts, a runner, told me—the last time the runner saw him—was flat on a rock not twenty yards away from one gun, blazing at it with an automatic in either hand. They hit him three times and hit him hard before he would consent to go to the rear.

There was not an officer left in the Eighty-second company, and Sibley and his adjutant, Bellamy, reorganized them under close fire and led them in a charge that put that particular nest out of business at the most critical time in all the fighting. I heard later that at that stage some one said, "Maj. Sibley ordered that ——," and another man said, "Where in hell is Sibley?" Sibley was twenty yards away at the time and a hush went down the line when they saw him step out to lead the charge.

"Old Man" Sibley on Job.

And when the word got around that dead tired, crippled outfit that the "old man" was on the line all hell couldn't have stopped that rush. With all the stories that I've heard about it I wonder if ever an outfit went up against a more desperate job, stuck to it so gamely without sleep, at times on short rations, with men and officers going off like flies, and I wonder if in all our long list of gallant deeds there ever were two better stunts than the work of Sibley and Holcomb.

Since the 10th, while the fighting has not been of that savage hand to hand fighting, we've been in there, the two regiments, always advancing, never giving an inch, attacking and smashing counter attacks by the literal score. They've had five and a part of a sixth division versus our brigade and half the time three divisions at once. One of them, the Twenty-eighth, is one of their finest.

Out of Grenades.

Just one more incident of Sibley's work. The supply of grenades gave out at one time, due mostly to the fact that no one knew what a veritable nest of machine guns those woods sheltered. They would have been a godsend, and as one of the men said, "When I thought of the hundreds I'd thrown away in practice I'd have given a million dollars for a grenade more than once."

They've had reliefs for a few days, the battalions, for it's a battalion war now, but many people would have hardly called it a rest. It was the best we could get, but the rest woods were shelled at times, there was no chance to scrub and wash clothes, and if it rained no shelter except ponchos and little dugouts that were soon flooded.

But every time they went back into the lines, dead tired, but with a spirit that made any task possible. There were times when it seemed to me, with my talk over the phone, their official and unofficial messages, and their reports of casualties, of bombardments and gas, that they must have reached their limit and could not hold. But they held like grim death without a whimper and got away with it.

March to Swimmin' Hole.

At one time, when a borrowed regiment took over the sector for a few days, the battalion marched back to the Marne for a swim. They had to go before daybreak and return at nightfall, and by the worst of luck those were cold, rainy days.

"We're still in —— (this was written on June 29), and the line now takes in all the woods from our right, which Sibley is now holding, up to the left, where the French are. In one night, on the 26th, Shearer moved his line forward for the Fifth and sent in 560 prisoners. The next two nights Keyser, on the extreme left, for the Fifth, moved his lines and took up the positions assigned without a loss and sent patrols 300 yards ahead without resistance.

They (the Germans) have had the fight knocked out of them, and admit it. The artillery has done wonderful work at all times. The last big draft of prisoners had been cut off from supplies for three days by our fire. One man in the Sixteenth company, Leonard, captured and held in the front lines, unarmed, brought in a captain, four lieutenants, and seventy-three German privates, all unarmed.

At two minutes before noon every day from now on, the Angelus will ring in La Grange, and the citizens will stop whatever they are doing, bare their heads, and pray for victory in the war with Germany. The village board of La Grange, at the request of a number of the churches, has taken the action and all business will cease during the ringing of the bells.

Miss Phylys Taylor and Mrs. H. A. M. Staley rang the bell yesterday at the Emanuel Episcopal church. All school and church bells will be rung in the future.

"We believe the plan is new," said the Rev. Benjamin E. Chapman, acting pastor of Emanuel church, "and we hope it will be taken up by other cities and villages."

FREE TRANSFER PLAN INJECTED IN CAR ORDINANCE

Council Committee Votes Various Changes in Draft.

A radical change in the ordinance for unification of the surface and elevated lines and a subway system was recommended yesterday by the city council committee on local transportation, which held an all day session to consider amendments to the measure.

The change was to knock out the provision for a 2 cent charge for transfers from the surface line to the elevated or subway. system. Instead of this, the committee adopted the policy of "one city, one fare," and left a transfer charge as one of the remote possibilities of the new ordinance.

Amendment Agreed Upon.

The amendment, which was agreed upon by the traction interests, Walter L. Fisher, the city's special counsel in traction affairs, and Ald. H. D. Capitain, chairman of the committee, provides for a 5 cent fare on any part of the unified system. It was stated that it would be possible to ride in any general direction, transfer or not, on the unified system by the payment of this fare.

To this amendment was added a clause to be effective if the federal war board's recommendation for higher fares is ordered by congressional or other action. If the federal authorities set 6 cents as a proper charge for fares, this sum will be the fare, under the new ordinance, as long as the federal order is in effect. It then will revert to the 5 cent fare mentioned in the ordinance proper.

"This amendment was made," said Mr. Fisher, "because we have found that the 'one city, one fare' idea ought to be carried out. There was a lot of objection and misstatements regarding the transfer charge of 2 cents, so we thought best to eliminate it."

Trustees Can Make Charge.

The board of trustees, which is to operate the unified system, is given the power to make a transfer charge if it is absolutely necessary to do so in order to make the system self supporting. It was stated by Mr. Fisher that the possibility of this was remote.

Every member of the committee agreed that the "one city, one fare" plan was a good one, and the committee unanimously voted to make the change.

The committee remained in session from 10 o'clock in the morning until after 6 o'clock at night. It considered dozens of amendments, some of which were adopted.

Employes Pledge Support.

William Quinlan, representing 15,000 traction employés, appeared at the meeting and said the employés gave the ordinance their support.

The amended ordinance is to be considered by the council on Wednesday. From the sentiment displayed toward it by the aldermen at yesterday's session of the committee it is believed that the measure will be passed by the council.

Other Amendments.

Among the other amendments the committee adopted yesterday were:

Provided for public comfort stations under the elevated lines, to be constructed under the direction of the trustees and paid for by the city.

Transferred building the South Chicago elevated extension from an indefinite construction period to assurance that this shall be built in the second three year construction period.

Transferred the elevated extension to One Hundred and Eleventh street and Michigan avenue from an indefinite period to the second three year construction period, and stipulated that this would be constructed to Eighty-seventh street and Indiana avenue in the agreed period.

Ordered that the Humboldt park branch of the elevated shall be extended west in North avenue, instead of west in Grand avenue, to the city limits.

Transferred the Sixty-third street elevated from Loomis street to Cicero avenue, paralleling Sixty-third street, from the second three year construction period to the general construction period.

Amendments Rejected.

They rejected a number of amendments offered by Ald. U. S. Schwartz. He wanted three aldermen or other city officials named as trustees, wanted the compensation of the executive committee placed at a limit of $20,000 a year for each member, and wanted the city council to have control over the issuance of new bonds and the refunding of old securities. He also wanted it made imperative on the trustees to carry out any order of the city council.

Mr. Fisher replied to Ald. Schwartz. The former said some of the alderman's remarks seemed to reflect the statements of Edward F. Dunne, former governor and mayor.

"There has been some talk that the valuation for the elevated lines is too high," said Mr. Fisher. "I want to say that the valuation is fixed on prices for materials and labor for the ten years prior to the war. If we made a valuation of the elevated properties now we would have to allow from 25 to 133 per cent more for the prices of materials and labor than the prices prevailing during the pre-war period.

Upholds Trustees.

"As to the trustees who have been named, I want to say that Ald. Capitain and I named five of them and that the board represents an ideal combination. The traction interests selected four trustees, and they had the right to select all nine of the trustees, but the alderman and I selected five."

The committee rejected all of Ald. Schwartz's suggestions.

LOWDEN IN NORTH SHORE TALK

Governor as He Appeared When He Paid Tribute to Soldiers' Parents.

5,000 CELEBRATE RAISING BOYS TO BE SOLDIERS

North Shore Fighters' Parents Hear Tribute of Lowden.

The north shore's most pretentious patriotic celebration since the beginning of the war was held yesterday at the lake front park in Highland Park. It was attended by 5,000 persons living in the suburbs from Evanston to Waukegan.

It was called Sons-in-Service day and the mothers and fathers of north shore soldiers and sailors were the guests of honor. The celebration was planned by the Four Minute Men of Highland Park.

Lowden is Speaker.

Gov. Frank O. Lowden was the principal speaker. The program followed a parade in which marched a jackie band, a regiment from the students' training camp at Fort Sheridan, and a cavalry troop and a company of infantry from Fort Sheridan. A seaplane from the Great Lakes station circled over the parade.

Francis W. Parker, who was divisional secretary for the Y. M. C. A. with the Rainbow division in France, spoke on the life of the boys in the trenches. He said that the men were in excellent physical shape, that three months in France was equivalent mentally to a college education, and that the moral conditions were better in the American army in France than in any of the cities at home near the great universities.

Lowden Talks to Parents.

Gov. Lowden spoke directly to the mothers and fathers of the boys in the service, and when he had concluded he shook hands with them all. He read letters from several soldiers and said they showed a fine, spiritual growth.

"I want you to take this comfort to yourselves," he said, "that those boys have answered, and answered yes, to the question which in their earliest years you most often asked: 'Will those boys lead useful lives?' Because whatever the future may hold for them, or however brief their lives may be on the battle front, they have already lived a fuller and a completer life and to a nobler purpose than many long lived generations of men in ordinary times.

All Spiritual Involved.

"If you will learn what the men in France are learning, that all that is fine, that all that is precious and dear, that all the nobler and more spiritual things which have blessed mankind are involved in this war, you will thank God that you have a son, or two sons, or three sons to give to civilization."

Samuel M. Hastings, mayor of Highland Park, presided.

Seeing Enemies Backs.

"The Yanks and the allies are now looking at the backs of the enemy," said Mr. Hastings, "and the Germans are doing the goose step in double time, led by their officers."

Miss Sophie Breslau of the Ravinia Opera company, dressed as Columbia, led in the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner." Red Cross nurses, soldiers, and sailors formed a background for her as she sang. The men who originated the Sons in Service day and who had charge of the affair were Frank L. Cheney, the Rev. Frank Fitt, Frederick Silber, R. L. Bandwick, and F. S. Munro.

JACKIE OF 18 TO WED GIRL OF 18 AT GREAT LAKES

Harry Martin Pike Stowers, 18 years old, and Miss Cornelia Dennis, 18 years old, are to be married tomorrow at Great Lakes by Chaplain Moore, with jackies assembled, the bridegroom himself being a jackie, unless something unforeseen intervenes. The something unforeseen almost wrecked the plans yesterday.

When Mrs. Gertrude A. Pike, 5403 Woodlawn avenue, a widow, called with Harry at the license bureau to give her consent to the ceremony the cold hearted clerk looked at her and said:

"O, you can't fool me. A very young person like you can't have any son 18 years old."

But here's something more. When Jackie Stowers came home two weeks ago on shore leave, after three trips to France on the U. S. S. Pocahontas, he wasn't thinking anything at all about marriage. Nor was he thinking one bit of Miss Cornelia.

Fact is, he had met her two years before. But when Jackie Stowers saw how Miss Cornelia had bloomed and——

Shucks, two weeks is enough to fix up any sort of wedding in these stirring times. Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Dennis of Indianapolis, Miss Cornelia's parents, are much surprised.

HAYWOOD PAINTS MILLENNIUM ON WITNESS STAND

'Big Bill' Says He Blames German Socialists for the War.

William D. Haywood, high chief of the I. W. W., told the jury in Judge Landis' court yesterday his creed. Haywood has visions of a happy day, no palaces, no homes of poverty, no profits, no wealth, no rent day coming 'round.

"Big Bill," as he is said to glory in being called, told the jury he was against the present or any other war.

"I believe there are other ways for men to settle difficulties than by millions of men speaking different tongues, being lined up and murdered," he said. "That is what it is—they are murdered. This means nothing for 100 years but war—nothing to follow the war for 100 years but war cripples, war orphans, and war widows."

Blames German Socialists.

Haywood said he blamed the German Socialists for the war most of all; that they could have ended it by striking; refusing to fight. He said that they could have told the kaiser:

"No, there will be no war. We are going to strike. The killing of an archduke is no cause for war." And if they had laid down their tools, Haywood said, this war never would have been even if 10,000 or 100,000 of them had been stood up against a wall and shot.

Haywood was asked what he would have done if he had wanted to cripple the war industries in the making of supplies. He said he would have got in touch with such I. W. W. leaders as Edward Doree and Francis Miller and asked them to bring about a curtailment of output and to interfere with the work.

Would Have Started Strikes.

Q.—What would you have tried to do in the iron mining industry? A.—I would have tried to get the men to go on strike there.

Q—By the way, there was a strike in the iron mines in 1916? A—Yes, but only for a short period and that was over the six hour day and the $6 a day wage.

Q.—How many I. W. W. members were involved in that strike? A.—About 17,000.

Q.—What else would you have tried to do? A.—There are the marine transport workers who handle the grain carried on the lakes. I would have tried to prevent the ships from carrying wheat and would have tried to stop them from being loaded. In the lumber industry I would have done the same thing.

Q.—And would you have tried to settle any of the strikes? A.—I certainly would not.

Asked About Steunenberg.

Haywood was asked about the blowing up of two mills and the assassination of Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho, for whose murder he was tried and acquitted.

Q.—Had Gov. Steunenberg acquired the enmity of the Western Federation of Miners? A.—Yes, they were sore at him.

The cross-examination of Haywood will be resumed tomorrow.

MEANS TO ASK REOPENING OF KING WILL CASE

Wants Two New Witnesses to Testify to Smith Signature.

Gaston B. Means announced yesterday that action will be taken at once to reopen the $3,000,000 James C. King will case on the ground that two new and important witnesses have been found. He said his attorney, Roy D. Keehn, would appear before Judge Horner of the Probate court within a few days and lay the facts before him.

Judge Horner recently took the case under advisement, and it was expected several weeks might elapse before he rendered a decision as to the validity of the "second King will."

Means said last night that the two new witnesses, "close friends of Mr. King in his lifetime and associates of high standing," had come to him voluntarily and told him that they could testify that the now famous "second will" is an honest one.

Identity Kept Secret.

Means declined to reveal the identity of these men, but said that they would take the stand and swear that they saw the second will both before and after it was executed and signed by Byron L. Smith. The authenticity of the signature of Mr. Smith, now dead, has been considered a most important factor in the fight for the King millions.

Means last night displayed a telegram from Maj. Nicholas Biddle, chief of the intelligence department of the United States army in New York. This said:

"Greatly appreciate your offer to come to New York to assist the government in certain investigations. Feel sure you can be of great assistance, and would be glad to see you the first of the week, if convenient to you. Please telegraph date of leaving."

To Prove He's Loyal.

Means said that while he is in the east he will produce proofs that he is a "loyal American citizen." He declared that he is anxious to clear himself of the suspicion that resulted from the hearing before Probate Judge Horner, owing to disclosures of his connections with various German agents.

"I have been charged with murder, forging a will, and disloyalty," he said. "There is not a word of truth in any of these charges. But when one has to fight the government, the district attorney of New York county, the state's attorney of Chicago, the governor and attorney general of North Carolina, and powerful financial interests, even the most innocent man has a fight on his hands.

"I shall be able to produce a series of letters and documents when the time comes to prove every claim I have made."

Means repeated that the Northern Trust company had plotted to send him to the electric chair for the death of Mrs. King. He added: "When I have shown these facts it will be up to the authorities to act as they deem advisable."

He said he had photographic records to show that the trust company had financed his prosecution.

SOLDIER SEEKS CHILD'S CUSTODY

A soldier's fight for the custody of his eight year old daughter, now with her mother, was begun with the filing of a habeas corpus writ in the Superior court yesterday. Frank P. Peters of the National army is the complainant. The subject of the controversy is Dorothy Peters, at present in the care of her mother, Mrs. Cora Peters, 637 Homan avenue. Shortly before he entered the army, according to the bill, Peters separated from his wife and left the child in a home in Des Moines, Ia. He told Judge Guerin yesterday that he wanted the little girl and would leave her with his sister until his return from military service. The writ was granted.

GIRLS' JOKE PUTS 16 IN CELLS ON THEFT CHARGES

Six Autos, $4,000 Loot, Recovered and $30,000 Case Opened.

A "Black Hand" letter written by two girls as a joke harvested a phenomenal crop yesterday.

Some of the results of an investigation of the missive announced by Capt. John J. Ryan of the Kensington police district were:

The rounding up of a gang of alleged automobile thieves and a band of alleged freight car thieves.

The arrest of other men as accessories, bringing the total number of men in custody to sixteen.

The recovery of six stolen automobiles and about $4,000 worth of merchandise.

A "lead" on a recent $30,000 robbery.

$50,000 Involved.

The total amount of property estimated as involved in the depredations of the two gangs is $50,000.

The booty recovered includes about 1,000 pounds of sugar, 500 pounds of flour, several bags of rice, a bale of blankets, a lot of woolen underwear and dresses, packages of shoes and leather, and pails of lard. In addition the confessions involve the theft of a carload of automobile tires and two whole (dead) hogs.

How It Started.

It all resulted from the whim of Mrs. Ellen Mangold, 178 Burr Oak avenue, Blue Island, a 20 year old bride of a soldier now in France, and Miss Linda Doehler, a neighbor. They were visiting in Roseland when they were struck with the idea of playing a joke on Mrs. Mangold's aunt, Mrs. Henry F. Thomas, 10859 South State street.

"Notice!" read the "Black Hand" letter they wrote. "Place $100 under the large rock at the corner of One Hundred and Ninth and Wabash avenue before 12 p. m. Saturday, Aug. 3, 1918. If you fail to do so you are in danger of having your baby girl kidnaped.

"IKE AND MIKE."

Mrs. Thomas appealed to Capt. Ryan. Upon suspicion, Walter Stearman, 10531 South Wabash avenue, said to be an uncle of Mrs. Mangold, was taken into custody. It was found that his automobile carried a license tag belonging to another machine. His car was identified as one that had been stolen. And he started the flood of confessions.

He was employed at the Advance Motor garage, 5752 South State street, and his story involved other men connected with the garage. George Medworth, president of the company, was arrested as having knowledge that the automobile thieves used his garage, but as participants in the actual thievery, the following were arrested:

FRANK ODENHEIMER, secretary-treasurer of the company.

JOHN RICE, a mechanic.

A fourth member of this gang, known as "Hess," is being sought.

Confession Leads to Others.

A confession that part of a car load of tires stolen from the Wabash railroad yards found its way to the Advance garage, led to the discovery of the second band of crooks. Peter ("Red") Seydel, living near Seventy-third street and Western avenue, and John Ovens, 7307 Claremont avenue, were brought in for the theft of the tires.

The arrest of four others for other thefts followed. They are:

GEORGE ("GEEZER") WUCHETCH, 7238 South Campbell avenue.

HERMAN JACKSON, 7246 South Campbell avenue.

LOUIS MAROSITIS, Claremont avenue near Seventy-third street.

SAM HIRTZER, 2049 West Seventieth place.

Four or five other men, names undisclosed, are under arrest.

The confessions told how the stolen automobiles had been disposed of, and also led to the arrest of William Fullerton, part owner of a garage at 3457 South Morgan street, who bought two of the machines.

The police refused to disclose the "lead on" the $30,000 robbery on which they are working.

OUT O' TH' MUD

Two Mile Concrete Stretch of Sheridan Road at Winnetka Dedicated.

A SIZABLE delegation of state and county officials, good roads enthusiasts, and politicians motored yesterday to Winnetka, where they "sat in" at the dedication and formal opening of a new two mile concrete stretch on Sheridan road.

The automobile parade, convoyed by motorcycle police, left Grant park early in the afternoon and was met in Winnetka by a band, a squad of jackies, and a seaplane from Great Lakes and Company B, Eleventh regiment, I. N. G., which was returning by motor from the rifle range at Camp Logan.

The ceremonies, held at the north end of the new pavement, included addresses by Attorney General E. J. Brundage, County Commissioners William Busse and William H. McLean, State Senator E. J. Glackin, and Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club.

Miss Marion Lasier of Winnetka christened the roadway with champagne and Mrs. John Hardin and Mrs. Ira Couch Wood performed the picturesque duty of cutting loose a huge observation balloon inscribed with the legend "Pulling Illinois Out of the Mud."

The new pavement, laid at a cost of $114,000, continues the Sheridan road concrete to the south limits of Hubbard Woods and links up the automobile route through the north shore towns to Lake Forest.

HERE'S A REAL SKIN GAME, ITS VICTIMS ASSERT

The "Alaska fox skin" swindle is the latest scheme to get money, according to the police of the Central station, who are now seeking a man posing as an English wireless operator who had been employed in Alaska by a corporation and is now on his way to Baltimore to take a wounded brother back to England.

Edward W. Neu, 3979 Vincennes avenue, in the stationery department of the federal reserve bank of Chicago, is the latest purchaser of a pair of skins. He paid $40 for each and later learned they were worth about $10.

According to Neu, a number of persons have been victimized by the supposed Englishman between Chicago and the Pacific coast. The "wireless operator" told Neu he had brought the skins to the United States from Alaska.

MOTOR FREIGHT SERVICE PLANNED

Plans to establish a motor truck transportation service to release railroad freight cars for full load service is being acted upon by the highway transport committee of the Illinois State Council of Defense.

The plan as discussed is to operate within a radius of thirty-five miles of Chicago. According to a recent survey of the field adjacent to Chicago 33,000 railroad cars are used per year in the handling "of less than carload lots" freight within this territory. By the plan under discussion most of the freight could be moved by motor trucks and these cars released to the railroads.

John W. Winterbotham, Henry Paulman, Leonard A. Busby, and Britton I. Budd are among the members of the committee working on the project. Headquarters have been established at 120 West Adams street, with Henry Paulman as chairman.

20 Sent to Bridewell on Work or Fight Order

The work or fight order was given a thorough test yesterday. Out of seventy men picked up as idlers along West Madison street, twenty were sent to the bridewell. The men were gathered in on a sweeping order given by Capt. James O'Toole of the Desplaines street station. They were arraigned before Judge Stewart of the Municipal court, who allowed fifteen to go when able to show they were employed. All except one of the men taken in custody were above the draft age.

WAITER TAKEN FOR GAMBLING.

Detectives raided room 335 in the Quincy building yesterday and arrested James Clark of 3940 West Twelfth street, a waiter. Racing sheets and a telephone were seized as evidence.

Hears Harmful Fight.

"Much to my regret, Mr. President, it has become increasingly evident that, should you choose to renominate me this might precipitate a harmful fight, which, in the interest of the country, I wish to do anything in my power to avoid, and which, even though resulting in my confirmation, would be likely to leave an element of irritation in the minds of many whose anxieties and sufferings may justify their intense feelings.

"On the other hand, if, for reasons of your own, you should decide not to renominate me, it is likely to be construed by many as an acceptance by you of a point of view which I am certain you would not wish to sanction. In these circumstances I deem it my duty to state to you myself that it is my firm belief that the interest of the country will best be served if my name be not considered by you in this connection.

Regrets to Quit Half Done Work.

"I am frank to admit that I have reached this conclusion with the deepest regret both on account of its cause and its effect.

"I have considered it the greatest privilege to serve my country at this time, and I do not abandon lightly a work half-done in which I am deeply and genuinely interested. But my continuation in office under present conditions might make the board a target of constant attack by unscrupulous or unreasoning people, and my concern to save any embarrassment to you and to the board in the accomplishment of its work would make it difficult for me to conserve that independence of mind and freedom of action without which nobody can do justice to himself or his office.

"In writing you this letter I have been prompted solely by sincere conviction that the national welfare must be our only concern. Whatever you may decide to be best for the country will determine my future course. We are at war, and I remain at your orders.

"May your patience and courage be rewarded and may it be given to you to lead our country to victory and peace."

The President's Reply.

The president's reply, written Aug. 9, reads:

"My Dear Mr. Warburg:

"I hope that my delay in replying to your letter concerning your retirement from the federal reserve board has not given you an impression of indifference on my part or any lack of appreciation of the fine personal and patriotic feeling which made that letter one of the most admirable and gratifying I have received during these troubled times. I have delayed only because I was hoping that the secretary of the treasury would be here to join me in expressing the confidence we both feel alike in your great ability and in your unselfish devotion to the public interest.

"Your retirement from the board is a serious loss to the public service. I consent to it only because I read between the lines of your generous letter that you will yourself feel more at ease if you are left free to serve in other ways.

"I know that your colleagues on the board have not only enjoyed their association with you but have also felt that your counsel has been indispensable in these first formative years of the new system which has served at the most critical period of the nation's financial history to steady and assure every financial process, and that their regret is as great as my own that it is, in your judgment, best for you to turn to other methods of service.

"You carry with you in your retirement from this work to which you have added distinction, my dear Mr. Warburg, my sincere friendship, admiration, and confidence, and, I need not add, my cordial good wishes."

SISAL TRUST? NO, IT'S CARRANZA, U. S. COURT SAYS

New York, Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Federal Circuit Court Judge Hough today dismissed the suit brought by the government to dissolve the alleged Yucatan sisal or binder twine monopoly. The defendants named in the suit, which was instituted Jan. 30, 1917, were the Pan-American Commission corporation, Sal Wexler, Lynn H. Dinkins, the Commission Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen, Juan Martinez, Menalio Marin, and Nicholas Ferraez.

The government charged that the monopoly, which had trebled the price of binder twine in this country, was created by the Commission Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen, backed by a proclamation issued to the Yucatan growers by Gen. Alvarado, Carranza's representative in that state.

Judge Hough says no evidence of a conspiracy is revealed; that the increase in price was not due to a monopoly, but to the arbitrary act of Carranza as dictator of affairs in Yucatan, and also to war conditions, resulting in a shortage of vessels to carry Manila hemp to this country.

Twelve Shoe Clerks Strike Against System of Fines

Yesterday morning at 10 o'clock twelve of the seventy-five clerks at Grossman's shoe store in the Masonic temple demanded that a penalty of 1 cent a minute imposed by the firm for lateness in the morning be abolished. They also demanded an additional fifteen minutes for lunch. The demand was refused and the men walked out. F. I. Grossman of the firm said none of the men had been with the concern over four months, and that all the rest of the employés are satisfied with conditions.

BARE MYSTERY OF LOOP HOTEL, REVEAL ANOTHER

Purloiner of Steaks Possesses Suspicious Hun Material.

When Edward Murek, who is lean and long, came out of the Planters hotel last night with a paunch on him like a Georgia clay eater, the ears of House Detective Edward C. Purdy crawled up the side of his head about an inch. Detective Purdy was hot on a mystery.

Chicken, roast beef, pork chops, and various other dainties attained by the rich in these days have been disappearing of recent days from the Planters. Detective Purdy had been told to find where to.

Pounds Come Off.

He sidled around to Mr. Murek, who had been till then a cook there, and looked at him east side and west side. Then he sent an S. O. S. for Detective Sergeants Lee and Hays. After he had been arrested they rolled Cook Murek out of one of the finest assortments of cold meats ever found wrapped around a man's tummy. Pounds of it came off and out.

Then the detectives began to ask questions of Mr. Murek. He admitted being an Austrian, 33 years old, and not registered. They think he is a German because he had German literature in his possession and matter showing him a member of a German club.

Suspicious Stuff in Room.

Then they went to his room at 116 West Erie street and there the police found two guns with ammunition; two pigeons which are being investigated to learn if they are carriers, and a call, issued in German, advising him to attend a meeting of the Foreign Language legion, as it is desired to make a good showing.

They also can't figure out why two live pigeons happen to be in a man's room. The mystery of the vanishing meat is solved, but the police say that there are other mysteries about the person of Cook Murek.

Bridwell Chief Sued for $70 Legal Fee for Inmate

Following his refusal to pay a legal fee of $70 from funds belonging to Robert Hamilton, an inmate, Joseph Siman, superintendent of the bridewell, was sued for that amount yesterday by the law firm of Callahan & Callahan. The lawyers said Hamilton sent them word that the money he owed them, had been forwarded by relatives to the institution and that they presented his written order for it. Supt. Siman's explanation to THE TRIBUNE was that ever since his appointment he has enforced a rule prohibiting the payment of more than $5 or $10 to attorneys out of prisoners' funds.

YOUTH FREED IN ATTACK CHARGE.

Peter Meyer, 19 years old, 1219 Leon place, Evanston, was discharged because of insufficient evidence when he was arraigned yesterday before Justice of the Peace Samuel Harrison on the complaint of Mrs. Mary Gauci, 1241 Leon place, who had accused him of attacking her daughter, Mary, 6 years old.

The Present Increase in Value of American Lands Has No Parallel in the History of the World

FARMING LANDS are soaring in value. Mankind demands food and that stupendous demand has made the farmer immensely wealthy today. But furthermore, America's cities are growing richer daily and consequently property values are rising and reflecting that increase in the farm lands surrounding them. Chicago's war-time industrial activities are creating demands for more homes and for small farms near Chicago to supply her workers with food and a place to live.

LONGWOOD FARMS Lie in the Path of Chicago's Most Valuable Industrial Growth

Longwood Farms are today just beyond the city's limits—45 minutes from the loop—Cook County's garden spot. Chicago's population is pushing out into Longwood Farms for fresh air, fresh vegetables, a comfortable home, a place where all the advantages of town and country are combined without their disadvantages.

Longwood Farms will bring big profits to their owners—today as valuable farm lands—tomorrow as valuable city lots with an almost unbelieveable return if the facts were not present today as they are.

Longwood Farms, per acre as low as $325 an acre and upwards. Terms 1-5 Cash; balance in 6 years

Every 5 acres contains 48 city lots, including four corners, 1,200 feet of frontage—5 acres at $1,625 means that you are paying $34 a lot, or only $1.40 per foot for future Chicago property.

Call or phone our main office, 140 So. Dearborn Street, any week-day and we will take you to the property. Come out today to our Longwood office on 95th St., opposite the Rock Island suburban depot, and we will take you by automobile to Longwood Farms—10 minutes' ride.

Write or Call for "Country Life in the City"

It describes Longwood Farms and their relationship to Chicago's future development. It tells you—by facts—the future of Chicago as a money-maker for you in real estate. It presents the economic advantages of suburban life. Send for it now—use the coupon.

Save Coal

Save Many Extra Shovels Full of Coal THIS WINTER

Save Coal! That is exactly what you will do if you install a Hummer Pipeless Furnace in your home, because the warm air from the furnace goes directly into the rooms that are to be heated—the heat goes where it is needed and where it will do you the most good. You get full benefit from all the fuel used.

And besides saving fuel, you also do away for all times with the disagreeable job of carrying coal into the best rooms of your house and taking the ashes out. You banish from the home forever, the dirt, soot, ashes and gases which are always present when the old fashioned heating methods are employed.

Instead of work, worry, trouble and dirt, you may have a perfectly heated home, well ventilated rooms and real comfort even in severe weather.

And these comforts may be yours for such a small outlay of money, that you will not deny yourself the thing you have always wanted—a home in which all of the rooms may be enjoyed during the Winter months.

HUMMER PIPELESS FURNACE $56.70 AND UP

The Hummer Pipeless Furnace can be installed in your house—whether it is old or new—at less expense, less trouble and less muss than any other type of heating plant. Only a small space is required for installation. If you do not have a basement under your entire house, a hole can be dug large enough for the furnace which will enable you to have an effective heating plant in every way. The only tools needed for actual installation are a saw and a hammer. Many of the users installed their furnace in less than a day.

It is very simple in construction and operation. There is nothing complicated—nothing to get out of order with the Hummer Pipeless Furnace.

Send for circular 170 which explains these furnaces in detail.

AMERICANIZED SYMPHONY TO BE ASKED OF STOCK

Conductor Will Be Questioned on Loyalty of Members.

Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchetsra, and Manager Albert Ulrich are to be summoned before Assistant District Attorney Francis Borrelli in an effort to Americanize the organization.

This was the announcement made yesterday by Mr. Borrelli after public disclosures of the alleged pro-German attitude of several orchestra members. The disclosures were made by loyal members of the organization who appeared as witnesses against four members accused of anti-American utterances.

Manager Ulrich, it is expected, will be asked to appear tomorrow, when the assistant district attorney's inquiry is resumed. Stock is said to be in the Adirondacks and it is not known when he will be summoned.

Steindel Chief Offender.

Chief among four alleged offenders whose names have been brought out in the inquiry of yesterday and Friday, according to the information given Mr. Borrelli, is Bruno Steindel, leading cellist of the orchestra. To alleged anti-American utterances charged against him Friday there was added Steindel's reported action when the "Star Spangled Banner" was played.

At that time, after war was declared by the United States against Germany, Steindel is said to have sung obscene words to the air of the national anthem as it was being played by the orchestra. As a result of this and other disclosures the cellist, who was born in Germany, became an American citizen in 1894 and has acquired a fortune of $150,000, faces the possibility of denaturalization.

Music "from the Heart."

The name of the orchestra conductor was brought into the inquiry by Mr. Borrelli in a rebuke to Steindel following assertions by others as to the cellist's alleged remarks.

"You know, Mr. Stock is a German, an alien enemy, don't you?" the attorney asked.

When Steindel answered in the affirmative, Mr. Borrelli continued:

"Just think of the situation: Mr. Stock of the same frame of mind as you are, leading an orchestra including such men as you in the playing of the Star Spangled Banner; you know that under such conditions the music doesn't come from the heart."

Proégé Is Accuser.

The principal witness against Steindel was his former protégé, Walter Ferner, also a cellist in the orchestra. With tears in his eyes, Ferner told of the early kindnesses of the elder man and of the later indignities he declared he had suffered from Steindel.

"I wish it understood," said Ferner, "that I loved Mr. Steindel as a father. But I have absolute contempt for the man, the way he has treated me in the last three years and his feelings toward this country. Now is my time to strike back."

Ferner told of Steindel's singing obscene words to the air of the national anthem. He also described the first cellist's actions during the playing of "The Marseillaise" in May, 1917.

"The French national anthem was played during an orchestra concert and was sung by a French soldier," said Ferner.

Called Him Traitor.

"The entire audience and all of the members of the orchestra except Mr. Steindel arose. After the concert he came to me and calling me 'lump' and 'schuft,' said I was a traitor to my country and should be kicked out of the orchestra."

Steindel, much excited by the testimony of the others, replied to the insistent queries of Mr. Borrelli as to the accuracy of the witnesses' statements: "I don't remember saying or doing anything like that. I wouldn't do it."

William Hebs, second trumpet of the organization, was closely questioned as to an attack he made on Ferner in a Clybourn avenue saloon during a war argument. Hebs, formerly in the German cavalry and with a brother and stepbrother now in the German army, denied to Mr. Borrelli that he had ever failed to stand up when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played.

Richard Kuss, who is said to have given as the reason for his not becoming an American citizen that he "did not believe in the American form of government," and Joseph Zettleman, kettle drummer, who is declared to have shown contempt when the national anthem was played, also were questioned.

Carpenters' Council to Investigate Traction Plan

At its regular meeting held last night at 22 West Randolph street the Carpenters' District council, with a membership of 22,000, appointed a committee of two to inquire into the pending traction ordinance. The purpose is to investigate the franchise thoroughly, to learn the reason for the demand for its immediate passage with no prospect of building subways until after the war, and to inquire into the method to be used in raising the sum of $600,000,000 said to be required. The committee consists of W. G. Schardt, William Brims, W. C. White, Daniel Galvin, and John Robinson.

CITY LAUNDRY IS OPENED TO CAPACITY CROWD

Filled to overflowing by 500 persons, the new Lincoln street municipal bath and laundry, 1019-21-23 North Lincoln street, was opened officially yesterday afternoon by Commissioner of Health Robertson and others.

The laundry and bath, owned and operated by the city, are free to all. Besides having such facilities as steam drying machinery for clothes, shower baths, and tanks have been arranged on the first floor of the building. Mondays and Thursdays have been designated as bathing days for women and Saturday mornings from 10 to 12 o'clock for boys. Men are free to come at other times.

"I hope that this municipal bath and laundry is a success," said Dr. Robertson, "and I think that Chicago appreciates such a thing as this because there are only eleven other cities in the country that have them."

The building will be under the supervision of Charles B. Ball, sanitary inspector of the health department, and will be managed by A. A. Spadstad.

Boy of 14 Kills Father for Choking His Mother

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Harold Frederick, 14 year old high school boy, who killed his father, a wealthy farmer, by shooting him in the heart with a shotgun, was held by a coroner's jury tonight on a charge of manslaughter. He gave $5,000 bail. He alleges he was protecting his mother, whom his father was choking.

EDWARDSVILLE'S MAYOR MAY BAR THOMPSON VISIT

Edwardsville, Ill., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago will probably not speak in Edwardsville, the county seat of Madison county. Permission for an outdoor gathering on Aug. 24 was withheld today by Mayor Henry P. Hotz of Edwardsville, when he was appealed to by John P. Garner, Chicago's commissioner of public service.

Medill McCormick, when he visited Edwardsville, was tendered a rousing reception. But with Thompson it is different. This is the county where Robert P. Prager was hanged. Last week an Austrian who said that "Austria would clean up on the Italians and then come over and get the Americans" was visited at his home by eighty miners and forced to kiss the flag. Two disloyal ministers have been compelled to flee.

In view of these events, and those which accompanied Thompson's appearance at Peoria a few days ago, when men paraded the streets with banners inscribed, "Come and hear the kaiser speak," Mayor Hotz told Garner that he questioned the feasibility of having Thompson here.

FRANCE AND U. S. MEET AT WEDDING OF MISS DYSART

Lieut. Berdonneau of the French Army Takes an American Bride.

At the most picturesque of the many military weddings that Chicago has witnessed in the last year and a half Miss Edith Louise Dysart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul LeMoyne Dysart of 4925 Lake Park avenue, yesterday became the bride of Lieut. Gaston Berdonneau, a member of the French military mission to the United States, now detailed as instructor at the training camp at Fort Sheridan. The wedding took place at 1:30 o'clock in the Kenwood Evangelical church. The service was read by the Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney. A reception at the Kenwood club followed the ceremony.

The color scheme of the wedding party was the blue and gold of the French infantry, matching the blue dress uniform of the groom, who is a grenadier of the Four Hundred and Eighth regiment of the French army. The bride's gown was of white satin and georgette and her tulle veil was fastened with orange blossoms. Her shower bouquet was of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Costumes of Attendants.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Leslie Carrol Hollingshead of Evanston, wore a yellow organdy frock and a hat of the organdy and French blue tulle. One of the bridesmaids, Miss Elizabeth Hannah of Kenilworth, wore yellow organdy, and the other bridesmaid, Miss Miriam Chickering, wore French blue organdy.

Lieut. Leon O. Druart, the best man, wore the black dress uniform of the French army engineers. The ushers and guard of honor, who were allied officers who have been associated with Lieut. Berdonneau during his nine months' service in this country, wore the field uniforms of their respective branches of service, except Lieut. W. G. Hamilton and Lieut. D. H. Grant, who wore the Kiltie uniform of the Black Watch Canadian Highlanders.

Officers Are Ushers.

The ushers were Capt. Frederick L. Pond and Capt. Lyons of the U. S. A.; Lieut. Henri Du Pont of the French army, and Capt. Sidney B. Minch of the British army. The guard of honor, Capt. Robert Payen and Capt. Georges Le Du of the French army and Capt. A. S. Chamley, Capt. C. J. Oake, Lieut. W. H. Parker, Lieut. McDonald, Lieut. Hamilton, and Lieut. Grant of the British army, made an archway of their sabers under which the bridal couple passed. A special guard of 100 men from Fort Sheridan was at the church.

Until recently Lieut. Bordonneau was attached to the divisional staff at Camp Grant.

REVENUE BILL PLAN WORKS OUT A BILLION SHORT

It Includes Whisky and Beer, Which May Be Knocked Out.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The house ways and means committee tonight is an even billion dollars short of its $8,000,000,000 goal in the framing of the tentative draft of the revenue bill, and that amount short of the total revenue after including all schedules so far tentatively adopted and the whisky and beer taxes, held until the last, and the luxury schedule, which falls far short of the $2,000,000,000 allotted it.

The committee next Monday, in what it plans to be its final week of framing the measure, will be forced to devise means to make up the billion dollars.

To Confer with McAdoo.

Chairman Kitchin of the committee expects to confer with Secretary McAdoo next week before the bill is given its final approval and differences between the treasury and the committee regarding the excess profits tax, it is expected, will be straightened out.

In considering how best to raise the remaining billion dollars there was renewed talk among committee members today of the feasibility of a gross sales tax. It was calculated that 1 per cent on every line of business would produce between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000. But it was held that to apply it to every business would be drastic.

Discuss New Sources.

There was also talk of an excise tax on tea, coffee, and sugar. A tax of 3 cents a pound on sugar and coffee and 10 or 15 cents a pound on tea, it was stated, would produce between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000.

Some members urged a resort to the tariff, saying an increase in customs duties to produce $400,000,000 should be adopted, but the committee has been trying to avoid reaching into the tariff.

The whisky and beer tax practically agreed upon would raise $810,000, but there is still hovering over this schedule the possibility of prohibition legislation that would wipe out revenue from liquors.

The treasury suggestion of a tax of from 25 to 75 per cent on servants' wages (to be paid by employers) has been disregarded by the committee.

Matthiessen Heirs Pay $177,989 Inheritance Tax

Ottawa, Ill., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—The sum of $177,989 was paid into the county treasurer's office as an inheritance tax today by the heirs of the late F. W. Matthiessen, zinc magnate of La Salle. Mr. Matthiessen owned $625,000 worth of German government bonds purchased long before the war. It is believed these bonds are worthless, and the $12,500 tax on these securities has been placed in escrow in a Chicago bank pending the final determination of their value. The heirs saved an additional $10,025 discount allowed for cash payment.

MILLION BOYS TO BE SOLDIERS OF U. S. INDUSTRY

New National Defense Plan to Use Youths, 14 or 15 to 19.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—A million youths to do industrial work, take military training in preparation for later army service, and at the same time attend special technical or vocational schools, is planned by the government as a means of dealing with the growing shortage of labor without drawing boys away from their schooling.

The corps will be developed through extension of the United States boys' working reserve, which already has enrolled 250,000 youths between the ages of 16 and 21, engaged mainly this summer in farm work. Many of these boys will go back to school this fall, but a large proportion, together with others to be enrolled, will be directed into industrial work to fill vacancies left by men now being drafted for the army.

Will Wear Uniforms.

These boys are to be organized as units in each community, serving under an adult training officer, taking courses of study in night schools or by some other systematic program, living either at home or in camps, and wearing the uniform of the reserve corps, which will be of gray cloth, with roll collar jacket.

Another feature of the program for drawing on the great reservoir of youth involves the postponing of the opening date of school courses to about Oct. 15 for the boys now at work on farms. This will apply only to those boys and not to all pupils.

An Impulse to Education.

Without this plan for an industrial army of youths, hundreds of thousands of boys would quit school this fall and winter, according to W. E. Hall, director of the boys' working reserve, to take big-paying jobs.

If the draft age minimum is reduced to 19, as is proposed by Secretary Baker, youths above that age would cease to be eligible to membership in the working reserve.

GRANT MEN SET HIGH HEALTH MARK FOR YEAR

Only 12 in Each Thousand Incapacitated for Any Reason.

Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Fighting men in Camp Grant pushed the health front of the army far ahead this week, according to figures compiled today by medical authorities of the Blackhawk division. The lead held for weeks past over all other army camps and posts in the United States was lengthened and the best health record of the military year established. Only twelve men in each thousand of approximately 53,000 men in the reservation were absent from their duties because of sickness or incapacity of any sort. The next best record in the country, was held by Camp Cody, where seventeen men in every thousand reported on sick calls.

No Malingerers Found.

Unusually excellent morale is credited in a large measure with the remarkable physical showing in camp. Medical officers declared today that to their knowledge every man who reported on sick calls during the week was in reality suffering from some ailment which he could not cloak, and not taking advantage of temporary or slight illness to be relieved from the hard routine of intensive training.

Officers were agreeably surprised today when the most minute inspection that has ever been held in camp cut down estimated unfits in the division 1,000 or more. It is believed not more than 2,000 soldiers in line regiments will have to be transferred from their organizations because of physical or mental disability.

5,000 Go on Leave.

The critical inspection of the division, a test resembling in every particular the rigid examination given army units at ports of embarkation before overseas service, was completed at or before noon by every Blackhawk organization, and 5,000 soldiers were able to board early afternoon trains for the precious week end vacation at home.

Maj. A. F. Dannemiller, who has commanded the Three Hundred and Thirty-first Machine Gun battalion since it was organized, received word today of his promotion to the grade of lieutenant colonel, and assigned to the Sixty-seventh infantry in Camp Sheridan, Ala.

I Want a Top-Notch Business Man as Partner

Our organization—one of the most important and successful in its line—has given, is giving, its efficient young men. They've gone where they belong. More power to them!

This shifts the responsibility and management pretty heavily on me.

I want a side-by-sider—a high-calibre, seasoned business man—active, a thinker, an executive, with vision, initiative and mature judgment.

It is an Opportunity of rare circumstance—for the one right man.

At no other time could such a connection be possible which permits walking into a business soundly established—having an annual volume of $250,000—requiring an investment, after he has proved the standing and success of the firm, of only enough to bind the relationship—$5,000 to $10,000. In the meantime, and afterward, a good salary.

Far more important is the man. But he does exist—somewhere—and I have just that much faith in The Chicago Tribune to believe it will find him for me.

He must, of course, not be subject to military service; a man accustomed to doing big things in a big way, with a record of business integrity. Specialized experience is not necessary.

It is not a stock-selling or investment business—is well capitalized and organized—a dignified, legitimate institution of which any man would be proud to be one of the principals. Complete information and opportunity for investigation will be furnished gladly to the right man.

Please communicate by letter only.

FORD'S VIEWS ON FLAG, SOLDIERS, AND PATRIOTISM

Extraordinary Beliefs of Michigan Auto Maker Recalled.

Fourth of a series of articles dealing with Mr. Ford's career in public life, compiled with a view to indicating his qualifications for the high public office to which he aspires—the senatorship from Michigan.

BY ARTHUR M. EVANS.

New York, Aug. 10.—Some of the extraordinary beliefs avowed by Henry Ford that soldiers are "either lazy or crazy," that the flag is "only something to rally around" and will not be flown over the Ford plant after the war, that the automobile maker does not believe in patriotism, which is "the last resort of a scoundrel," that the American Revolution is only a "tradition"—are being pulled out of the pigeonholes in Michigan, where the voters are weighing the qualifications of the Democratic pick for Republican senator.

Back in 1916, May 8, to be exact, the day after the first anniversary of the sinking of the Lusitania, Henry A. Wise Wood was asked by some men of Detroit to try to "convert Uncle Hank."

Mr. Wood is a former member of the naval consulting board, one of the originators of the defense movement, and he has been chairman of the Conference Committee on National Preparedness since its organization in June, 1915. He had been called to Detroit to deliver a public address on national defense, and being urged by H. H. Esselstyn, commissioner of public works, and others to carry his message direct to the "Lizzie" factory, Mr. Wood went out and talked with Ford.

Wrote Notes of Their Talk.

Mr. Wood was so amazed at some of Mr. Ford's declarations that he at once wrote out a full set of notes and on his return to New York sent them to the Times and put them on record in black and white.

In his Madison Square office a few days ago, the naval expert went over the story again.

"We had lunch at the factory," said Mr. Wood, "and in the party were Mr. Esselstyn, a Mr. Murphy, Mr. Ford, his son Edsel, and myself. I proposed that each of us lay his cards on the table and discuss the needs of increases in the army and navy. I found Mr. Ford eager to talk about national defense, but unwilling to discuss it. He made assertions with great rapidity, but refused to pause long enough to permit any one of them to be examined.

"Navy Is Large Enough."

"We talked of the navy. 'I'm for disarmament,' said Mr. Ford, 'our navy is large enough.' I replied that instead of disarmament we needed superarmament, and went on to submit the facts. Mr. Ford interrupted with a question: 'Are you a navy man?' I said: 'No, but I've made a life study of naval questions and have been a member of the naval consulting board.' 'O, well,' said Mr. Ford with a wave of his hand, 'If you aren't a navy man you can't speak with authority.'

"'Very good,' said I, pulling a set of documents out of my pocket. 'I came prepared for that, let me read you the words of Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, who made these statements I have set before you.' 'Did Admiral Fiske say that?' asked Mr. Ford after I had read an excerpt or two. 'He certainly did,' I replied. 'Well,' said Mr. Ford, 'he's a navy man and therefore prejudiced. Let's dismiss the navy.'

"His attitude was that, on army and navy subjects, the statements of a civilian were not to be credited, nor those of a professional to be trusted, therefore, they were not open to discussion. By this simple mental operation he shut the gates.

Talks of "Coast Defenses."

"He passed to coast defenses and said they could keep any enemy off. I said: 'We have no coast defenses; we have only harbor defenses. There are tremendous strips of coast where an enemy could make a landing without interference from our coast defenses. I do much yachting and often put into Gloucester, Mass. There is a great harbor in which any number of transports could find anchorage. The nearest gun to the west is at Boston, twenty-odd miles away; the nearest gun to the east is at Portsmouth, the same distance away. Gloucester is on Cape Ann, a rockbound peninsula, on which an army of 500,000 could be maintained and defended, if properly supplied by sea."

"'How many roads are there to Cape Ann?' asked Mr. Ford. I said, 'One road.'

"'There ought to be 200,' exclaimed Mr. Ford excitedly.

"'Why?" said I.

"'Every farmer nowadays has his automobile,' replied Mr. Ford, 'and everybody knows every farmer has a gun!'

Two Bankers Not Named.

"He passed on to another subject. He said the war was caused by two men, bankers. I asked their names. 'I won't tell,' said Ford, 'but I'm on their trail. I'm going to see the tooth is pulled.'

"As we strolled around the plant, Mr. Ford said he had found a permanent remedy for warfare, which he refused to reveal, saying I should learn in due time what it was. He asked what was thought of his success. He seemed indifferent to praise of his wonderful automobile plant, but appeared greedy for praise for his peace ventures. His attitude was that there was no one like Henry Ford in the world, that he was the one man who could re-create the world just as he had created the automobile industry. The president had called him for consultation at the White House—that is the key to his regard for himself—he was now a world figure, the one man who could stop the war by waving his hand.

Need No Clubs or Revolvers.

"I likened the external need for a defensive military force to the internal need for an armed police. 'The police need no clubs nor revolvers,' said Mr. Ford. 'That policeman over there doesn't carry a gun. You don't see me carrying a gun. We have peace in this factory and the men don't carry guns.' In the next breath he suddenly asked, 'Are you a deputy sheriff? I'm one.' 'No,' said I. 'Well, you ought to be,' said Mr. Ford. 'Why?' I asked. 'You never can tell when something may happen,' said Mr. Ford.

"When in our discussion history was appealed to, Mr. Ford burst out, 'I don't believe in history. I never studied it.'

"'It's the story of the career of the race,' I said.

"'What lesson has the past to teach?' said Mr. Ford. 'We live in the present; history has nothing to show us.'

The Revolution a Tradition.

"'The revolution, is its history of no value?' I asked.

"'The revolution is only a tradition,' replied Mr. Ford. 'I don't believe in tradition.'

"When the word patriotism was touched upon, Mr. Ford burst out: 'I don't believe in patriotism. The word patriotism is always the last resort of a scoundrel.'

"I inquired whether he would make war supplies if America got into the war, and he replied that even if we were invaded he would not make a dollar's worth of arms for the United States. To make no mistake as to his meaning I put the question three times and three times got the same answer.

"Finally I said: 'Mr. Ford, on your roof are three American flags. On seeing them it hurt me to think that beneath them was a man who is spending vast sums amassed under their protection to ruin the defenses of his country and lay it open to a possibly hostile world.' To this he replied: 'When the war is over those flags shall come down, never to go up again. I don't believe in the flag; it is only something to rally around.'

More than a Puzzle; a Pursuit.

"In commenting upon my talk with Mr. Ford, the Detroit Saturday Night aptly remarked; 'Understanding Henry Ford is more than a puzzle; it is a pursuit.'

"I regarded Mr. Ford then as I regard him now, a dangerous visionary. To make such a man, with such a record, a member of the senate, the treaty ratifying body of our government, is to take a step in the direction of undoing at a critical moment the work for which our men are now offering their lives.

"If, for instance, the senate should be divided as to whether we should accept an inconclusive peace or require a complete and decisive victory before laying down our arms, and the deciding vote was that of Henry Ford, what a tragic heritage of future wars we should bequeath to our children."

John Reed's Interview with Ford.

A few months after Mr. Wood's interview with Mr. Ford a study of Mr. Ford was contributed to the Metropolitan magazine for October, 1916, by John Reed, based upon a long talk with the automobile man on his native heath at Dearborn, Mich. The article, which was entitled "Industry's Miracle Maker," was a minute piece of portraiture. Here are a few excerpts from Reed's article dealing with Ford's views on the flag, upon soldiers, and democracy:

"Do you think we will have an enormous army and navy and compulsory military service in this country?" [asked Reed].

"Not on your life! Our people have got too much sense. I've got feelers out everywhere, and I know what the people think about that. Why, in this country we've got a hundred million people of the best and in the world. If we ever got going you couldn't stop us—and the other nations know it, too. In this country most soldiers are either lazy, or crazy, or out of a job. Well, we'll see that they have jobs—and there's not enough lazy and crazy men left to worry us."

They sneer at Henry Ford because he doesn't know history. I spoke to him about it.

"No, I don't know anything about history, and I wouldn't give a nickel for all the history in the world. The only history worth while is the history we make day by day. I don't want to live in the past; I want to live in the now. Those fellows over there in Europe knew all about history; they knew all about how wars are started, and yet they went and plunged Europe into the biggest war that ever was. And by the same old mistakes, too. Besides, history is being rewritten every year from a new point of view, so how can anybody claim to know the truth about history?"

I thought of Gibbon's famous remark: "History is a record of man's butcheries."

"I don't believe in boundaries," he [Ford] rambled on. "I think nations are silly, and flags are silly, too. If the country is rotten, then the flag is rotten, and nobody ought to respect it. Flags are rallying points, that's all. The munitions makers and the militarists and the crooked politicians use flags to get people excited when they want to fool them. I'm going to keep the American flag flying on my plant until the war is over, and then I'm going to pull it down for good; and I'm going to hoist in its place the flag of all nations, which is being designed in my office right now."

"The munitions makers build up wars" [Ford is quoted as saying] "so they can make a profit, and the business men build up wars so they can get concessions. But these are not the people who are really responsible for it. The real people behind this war are the big money lenders, the international money trust. . . .

"I don't believe in preparedness; it's like a man carrying a gun. Men and nations who carry guns always get into trouble.

"I'm going to spend my life and my money putting a stop to war by telling the people about it. I won't fight under any circumstances. I don't believe in war; I don't think it settles anything. I'll [illegible]."

Cited by Von Tiling.

The solace and encouragement which pro-Germans derived from some of Mr. Ford's pacifistic utterances and his propensity for peace-at-any-price before we got into the war, finds an illustration in the case of Dr. Johannes Herman Martin Augustus von Tiling of Poughkeepsie. The government recently instituted proceedings to cancel Von Tiling's citizenship papers on account of utterances to the effect that the sinking of the Lusitania was justified.

"On the day the news of the sinking of the Lusitania was received in the United States," says Von Tiling's sworn answer, "respondent had in his office Mr. John Burroughs of West Park and Mr. Henry Ford of Detroit, both patients. While in conversation with them respondent (Von Tiling) was called to the telephone and during the conversation was told the Lusitania had been sunk. When he returned to his patients he told them what he had heard as to the sinking of the Lusitania and Mr. Ford said in substance:

"'Well, they were fools to go on that boat; they were warned.'

"Later respondent read of the warning alleged to have been given and also other statements as to the different views of people in the United States and abroad and he repeated in private, never publicly, what Mr. Ford had said and what he had read."

Read Wilson by Contrast.

Compare that with President Wilson's notes to Germany on the Lusitania sinking, the first one of which told the kaiser the United States would "omit no word or act" to maintain its rights, and that "no warning that an unlawful and inhumane act will be committed can possibly be accepted as an excuse or palliation for that act."

FESTIVE

Cousins to Take Part in United Irish Societies Program.

Miss Catherine Ryan
Miss Kathleen Ryan

Miss Kathleen Ryan and Miss Katherine Ryan are two of the pretty Irish girls who will take active parts in the Lady day in Harvest festival, to be given by the United Irish societies of Chicago on Aug. 15 at Brand's park. They are cousins, and while one sings Irish songs, the other will take part in the Irish dancing, always a principal feature of the festival. Liberty bonds and thrift stamps, instead of money and medals, will be the prizes for all events and contests. Special athletic events have been arranged for soldiers and sailors in uniform. Alderman Thomas J. Ahern is president of the United Irish societies and will be chairman of the day.

SHRAPNEL

Slovaks of Cook county are planning to hold a history making celebration at White City Aug. 25, when a service flag with more than 1,000 stars, some of them gold, will be unfurled. The festival is to be under the auspices of the foreign language division of the war savings committee. Adjt. Gen. Dickson will be guest of honor and the chief speaker of the day. The festivities will start at 3:30 in the afternoon. Arrangements are in charge of John Kubicek, chairman, assisted by Ondrey Schustek, treasurer, and others.

The government is in need of men to fill hundreds of positions in engineering, technical, professional, scientific, drafting, clerical, and miscellaneous lines. The city civil service commission in a letter from the federal civil service commission is appealed to to aid in finding men qualified to fill these vacant places. A list of more than 200 occupations accompanies the letter, which states that these "are only the most pressing of the governmental needs." The list is in the hands of Harry E. Wallace, secretary of the city civil service body.

Drills, sham battles, and other war tactics are being experienced by members of the headquarters company of Gen. James E. Stuart's Eleventh Illinois infantry on Cedar island, near Fox Lake, the island being provided by its owner, John F. McGrath, for the outing. This week "Camp Stuart" was defended by the "Blues" in a battle with the "Reds," during which world war tactics were used.

Reports of plans for the formation of a National Aid association for drafted men, similar to the Selective Service Association of Northern Illinois, to which all members of the local draft boards belong, will be read at a meeting of draft officials Monday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the assembly hall of the State Council of Defense building.

The Improved Order of Red Men will present an ambulance to the base hospital at Camp Grant this afternoon and many members of that organization from Chicago will take part in the ceremony.

Thirty children sang patriotic songs last night in a celebration in honor of ten boys in the 1700 block of Monticello avenue who have entered military service. An orchestra assisted in the demonstration, which closed with a flag raising in honor of the boys.

PATTEN STARTS WAR STAMP RACE

As the result of a challenge issued yesterday by James A. Patten of Evanston, former wheat king, large sales of war savings stamps are expected in Evanston and Oak Park for the championship of the suburbs north and west of Chicago. The challenge of Mr. Patten follows:

"If Evanston's sales of war savings stamps do not exceed those of Oak Park and River Forest, I will purchase as many stamps as the men, women, and children from Devon avenue in Chicago to the north limits of Evanston."

Thus far residents of Oak Park have invested $197,000 in war savings stamps, all purchases being made in the villages of Oak Park and River Forest. Evanstonians have bought stamps worth $125,000 in Evanston and $75,000 more outside Evanston.

SOCIALIST PARTY CHIEFS HERE ON WAR PROBLEMS

Stand on Policy and Loyalty Issues to Be Settled.

The leaders of the national Socialist party are assembled here to consider the party's war attitude, its stand in the coming congressional campaign, and its policy with reference to such members and leaders as are under federal indictment.

Thursday ten of the fifteen members of the new executive committee of the party, elected July 1 to succeed the old governing body of five, gathered here. Their sessions, held at the party's national headquarters, Madison and Halsted streets, were cloaked in secrecy.

Yesterday morning at Imperial hall, 2409 North Halsted street, there was a joint conference of the executive committee, the state secretaries of the party, the national secretary, representatives of the different foreign language federations, and the National Young People's Socialist league.

Main Session Today.

The conference dealt largely with preliminary matters, the main interest in the gathering being reserved for today. It was presided over by Joseph H. Coldwell, state organizer for Rhode Island and under sentence of five years' imprisonment for speeches he made in his home state. Mrs. Mary Raoul Millis of Georgia was secretary. Reports from various state secretaries featured the first session.

Illinois Report.

The Illinois report showed an increase of 2,000 in the party membership in the state during 1918, "some interference with meetings and difficulties in getting halls in some parts of the state."

There were thirty state secretaries, ten executive committeemen, and delegates from the German, Finnish, Lettish, Jewish, Lithuanian, South Slavic, Bohemian, Italian, Hungarian, and Russian federations and one from the Young People's Socialist league present.

Committees on credentials, resolutions, propaganda and organization, ways and means, Socialist press, and civil liberties were appointed.

Other Leaders Here.

A number of Socialist leaders who are not members of the conference are also in the city. These include Prof. J. Scott Nearing, who is a candidate for congress and is also under indictment, and Mahlon Barnes, Philadelphia, who is a leader in organized labor. These are here to confer with the executive committee relative to raising a "million dollar defense fund" for indicted members.

"Whenever they indict a man we nominate him for congress," remarked one leader, a candidate for congress and also under indictment.

Today will conclude the conference.

FACES LOSS OF WIFE HE 'SAVED FROM HERSELF'

Mrs. Melick Barred as Y. M. C. A. Aid, but Breach Widens.

"I want to save my wife from herself," Prof. Clark Owen Melick explained to Judge John A. Mahoney on Friday when he appealed to the head of the Court of Domestic Relations for aid in preventing Mrs. Melick from going to France as a Y. M. C. A. canteen worker.

And so it came about yesterday that the husband, who is a professor at the University of Chicago, achieved partial success, at least. The publicity attendant upon his call on Judge Mahoney brought the status of the domestic affairs of the Melicks to the attention of Miss Esther Johnson, secretary to Mrs. William G. Hibbard, chairman of the overseas committee of the Y. M. C. A. Mrs. Melick's commission was revoked and her plans to work among the soldiers in France went agley.

Marital Breach Widened.

But in saving Mrs. Melick from herself Judge Mahoney expressed the fear last night that the breach between husband and wife has been widened. There were tears in the educator's eyes as he told the judge he believed Mrs. Melick was prompted in her desire to go to the war zone by other motives than patriotism. He mentioned the name of a young army aviator, once a roomer in his home at 5557 Drexel avenue, whom he ejected, he said, because of a too mutual admiration between Mrs. Melick and the younger man.

But now Prof. Melick is face to face with even a more difficult problem Judge Mahoney believes, and that is how to convince his wife that he adopted the wiser course in thwarting her ambition to go to France.

Secluded in Apartment.

The Melick apartment on the south side presented an aspect of gloom all day. Mrs. Melick left early in the morning and had not returned up to a late hour last night. A man occupied the apartment alone, but he denied that he was Prof. Melick. Later the door bell and telephone were disconnected.

"She wanted me to grant her a divorce," the husband told Judge Mahoney. "I refused to entertain the idea. I love her and want to win her back."

"The question in my mind is whether Prof. Melick has adopted the better course to accomplish his desire," the jurist said last night. "I asked him to bring her to me for a talk. They did not show up. My experience has taught me that women cannot be driven to love a man. I am afraid that Prof. Melick has widened the breach."

GIRL HELD ON BURGLARY CHARGE.

Geraldine Long, 20 years old, 1311 West Jackson boulevard, was held to the grand jury on a charge of burglary by Judge Hugh R. Stewart, in the Desplaines street court today. The Long woman, who is also said to be known as Jeanette Fisher, was arrested as she was leaving the home of Mrs. H. Johnson, 1309 West Jackson boulevard, where it is said she entered by using a duplicate key.

SENATOR LEWIS GOING TO FRANCE; LOTS OF MYSTERY

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—His colleagues in the senate and official Washington were greatly mystified by the disclosure today that Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Chicago is on the high seas bound for France on a mysterious mission. Efforts to solve the mystery of Senator Lewis' mission proved unavailing. All that is known is that he left hurriedly and that he conferred with the president just before his departure. His secretary, Wallace Streeter, accompanied him.

At the state department today it was said that nothing was known of the nature of the Illinois senator's mission.

At the White House there was no confirmation of a report that Senator Lewis' trip has to do with the probable attitude of the United States and allied governments toward probable peace proposals from the central powers.

In official circles this unconfirmed rumor was received with considerable surprise, it being generally accepted here that Col. E. M. House is the president's official foreign messenger on peace missions.

How long Senator Lewis is to remain abroad could not be learned, but it is believed here that he will return with abundant material for use in the senatorial campaign in Illinois.

Fight to Prevent Pardon for Policeman's Slayer

Assistant State's Attorney Justin F. McCarthy left yesterday for Springfield, where he will tomorrow oppose the efforts of attorneys for Albert Johnson, under sentence of death for murder, to secure a pardon or a modification of the sentence. Johnson, after committing a burglary, was chased by Policeman Martin Corcoran, whom he shot and killed. It is said Johnson's attorneys will enter a plea of insanity.

PACKARD TWIN SIX
The Vindication of a Principle

THE war didn't bring the Packard to its present efficiency. The critical standards by which men judge things today have always been Packard standards.

The Packard organization long ago saw that a radical improvement was necessary in motor car construction. Old designs—good as they were in their day—did not meet the growing congestion on the motor thoroughfares of American Cities.

So the Packard created the Twin Six engine—with its smooth, even flow of power, its niggardly consumption of gasoline, and its all-around efficiency.

The easy slow-up, the quick pick-up, the instant response in the pinch demanded by present-day traffic conditions are not a strain on the Packard. The Twin Six engine was built to meet them with scarcely the shifting of a gear.

These are matters of every-day knowledge to the 20,000 Twin Six owners. The one fact that never ceases to be a wonder to them is the economical use of gasoline and tires.

Plans were completed yesterday by the Salvation Army drive executive committee for the seven-day effort to raise $500,000 in Chicago for the work of the Salvation Army on the battle front in France. The program for the week was also announced.

Tonight sermons will be preached in many churches, telling of the remarkable work being done. In Austin, at Holden Square, Maj. John E. Atkins, former chaplain of the regiment to which Maj. Theodore Roosevelt is attached, will address a union meeting of congregations.

Action Starts Tomorrow.

Tomorrow the drive divisions will start active work. On Tuesday will be held "Flower Day," in charge of Mrs. A. J. Lichstern, who has organized a division of the prettiest girls in Chicago to sell flowers. They will wear the poke bonnets and blue uniforms of the Salvation Army.

Thursday is to be "coffee and doughnut day" and doughnut and pie tags will be sold under the leadership of Mrs. George M. Shirk. On the doughnut tags will be, "I have bought a doughnut to be served to a soldier in France."

Arrangements are being made for an exhibition of flying, aviators from nearby training posts to assemble for a series of stunts to arouse interest. The day has not been fixed. Arrangements are incomplete.

Those in Charge.

Those in active charge of the drive to raise $500,000 in Chicago are Lewis E. Myers, general chairman; Mrs. J. Ogden Armour, vice chairman; George M. Reynolds, treasurer; Thomas D. Knight, secretary; W. J. Sinek, chairman drive committee; Robert M. Sweitzer, chairman exemption district organization, and Mrs. William Shirk, chairman woman's committee, Cook county auxiliary.

Beauties to Help in Drive for Doughnuts at Booth in Loop.

Miss Virginia Keary

Mrs. G. W. Nevius, who is to have charge of the "doughnuts and coffee" booth at State and Washington streets to roll up cash for the Salvation Army all next week, has hit upon an idea which she thinks ought almost to stop the traffic. She has enlisted the help of the girls of the "Doing Our Bit" company at the Palace theater. All the prize beauties of the show, with the chorus thrown in, and Miss Virginia Keary, too, will be there.

EX-GOV. KELLOGG, VETERAN OF THE CIVIL WAR, DIES

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—William Pitt Kellogg, formerly of Canton, Ill., who served during the reconstruction period as United States senator and member of the house of representatives from Louisiana, and as governor of that state, died this morning, at the age of 88. He had made his home in Washington since 1876.

Gov. Kellogg, who was the only surviving Lincoln elector for the year 1860, was born in Orwell, Vt., Dec. 8, 1830, the son of the Rev. Sherman Kellogg. He was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1852 and practiced in Canton, where he met and married Miss Mary E. Wells, who died last March.

In 1861 he was appointed chief justice of Nebraska, then a territory, and on the outbreak of the civil war he raised and became colonel of the 7th Illinois cavalry, being granted leave from his judicial duties by President Lincoln.

CHURCHES OPEN SAVINGS STAMP CAMPAIGN TODAY

Formal Drive for Pledges of 3,000,000 Begins on Thursday.

Ministers of the gospel—thousands of them, representing all denominations—will fire the opening gun in the great Pershing Patriot week drive for the sale of War Savings stamps this morning. From Waukegan to Cairo and from the Indiana line to the Mississippi the Pershing message will be spoken today in every pulpit and the hundreds of thousands of church goers will be urged to lend their money to their government over here in order that the American boys over there may lack for nothing in their victorious fight against the Hun.

Need 3,000,000 Names.

Not fewer than 3,000,000 names must be signed to the Pershing Patriot honor roll which is to be forwarded first to President Wilson at Washington and then to Gen. Pershing in France. Every name will represent the investment of at least $4.19 in the victory stamps, and many of ten, twenty, or a hundred times that much. Nothing less than $20,000,000 for the government during this week will satisfy the committee for Illinois.

The definite drive for signatures to the Pershing Patriot honor roll will not begin until Thursday—Aug. 15 to 22 are the opening and closing days of the drive as announced. But already hundreds of names are being recruited.

Supplies Are Ready.

Enormous quantities of supplies for the drive are now being sent forward from the state and county headquarters. The Pershing window cards and coat tags go to the various postoffices and are delivered when the stamps are purchased. The honor rolls and order cards go to the various canvassers.

Pershing Patriot week will start in Oak Park and River Forest today.

In Chicago hundreds of girls, under the general direction of Mrs. Frederick Tahl, will start out Thursday morning distributing the Pershing Patriot honor rolls in the loop office buildings. Mrs. James Presnell, with scores of young women under her direction, will establish booths in the various banks. The street booths, under the charge of Mrs. A. Hamilton Lamm, will not be in operation until next Monday so as not to conflict with the Salvation Army street campaign.

Cicero Police and Firemen Get $25 a Month Raise

FUNERAL SERVICE FOR JOHN D. SHOOP SET FOR MONDAY

Knights Templar to Conduct Rites Here.

Arrangements were completed yesterday for the funeral services for Supt. John D. Shoop, who died suddenly in Rockville, Ind., on Friday. The Englewood commandery, Knights Templar, will have charge of the services which will be held tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Chicago Normal college.

The body will lie in state tomorrow at the Normal college from 9 a. m. until the services are over. Mrs. Shoop who reached Chicago yesterday morning from Washington Courthouse, O., about the same time the body arrived from Rockville, will take the body back to Ohio tomorrow night. Elaborate funeral services will be held on Tuesday in Washington Courthouse.

Escort to Ohio.

President Edwin S. Davis of the board of education, has delegated Assistant Superintendent E. E. Cole, Miss Martha B. Bishop, district superintendent, and Dr. Sadie Bay Adair, of the school board to return with Mrs. Shoop and to attend the funeral services in Washington Courthouse, where the burial will occur.

All the officers and the summer school activities will be closed all day tomorrow for the services here. There will be a special meeting of the board at 11 a. m., when appropriate action will be taken, and the trustees will attend the services in a body with the heads of departments and other employés.

After the services 340 school engineers will serve as an escort to the body when it is taken from the Normal college to the Shoop residence at 7114 Normal avenue.

The pallbearers will be L. C. Sandusky, Will Sharpe, Lowell Hoit, Charles R. Young, James D. Skinner, and Clarence E. De Butts. President Edwin S. Davis of the board of education could not be reached by school officials last night to give his approval to the long list of honorary pallbearers.

Friends Meet Widow.

When Mrs. Shoop arrived, she was met at the Englewood station by President Davis, Assistant Superintendent Peter A. Mortenson, and E. E. Cole, and District Superintendent John H. Stube. W. M. Roberts and Frank G. Bruner brought the body back from Rockville.

Mr. Shoop died from apoplexy, and not from heart failure, as at first reported, according to Mr. Bruner. He had been unconscious for some time before it was noticed that he was dying.

BODY OF BOAT VICTIM FOUND.

The body of Willard Einsley, 32 years old, Green Bay, Wis., was recovered from the Calumet river yesterday afternoon. Einsley was a fireman on The North Harbor, the tug sunk at the mouth of the river at Ninety-first street Aug. 7, when rammed by the steamer Capt. Wilson.

This is unknown in Northwest Florida. No heat prostration has been recorded in 40 years

HEAT CAUSES MORE DEATHS

While the weather man promised relief from the torrid wave which has swept Chicago since Sunday, two deaths and eight prostrations were reported today.

Hundreds of persons flocked to the bathing beaches and the parks to seek relief from the excessive heat.

Two Deaths Reported

Two sudden deaths were reported to the coroner and were believed to have been superinduced by the heat. They are: John Wilson, 3967 South Park avenue, and Baby Clifford Briggs, 4 months old, 1922 Michigan avenue.

GLORIOUS CLIMATE ALL THE YEAR 'ROUND

Thanks to the Gulf breeze, the intense, sultry, sickening heat so familiar to all in the North and East and Northwest, is absolutely unknown in Western Florida. During a period of 24 years the warmest July average reported was 83. The coldest February average, 45. The winter climate is a joy. While your old Northern neighbors are shoveling snow and high-priced coal, you can pick strawberries from your garden for your Christmas dinner!

Here's something better than building "air castles"—dreaming of the time when you can quit the hard grind of business and "live happily ever after."

A business-like, practical plan that will, for a modest investment, provide you with an income-producing 5-acre Farm Estate, stocked with cattle, sheep and hogs, and a Villa Site in the new town of Newport, on beautiful Santa Rosa Sound, one of the prettiest, most picturesque spots on the Gulf Coast of Florida.

A Newport Home and Farm Estate makes it possible for the man who has been active all his life to work less, play more, live longer and enjoy real independence.

FOUR HOURS' WORK—TWENTY HOURS FOR REST AND PLAY WILL PROVIDE YOU A GOOD LIVING ANY DAY

The problem of living is simpler here than almost anywhere else on earth. Nature does most of the work. Four hours a day to look after your fine live stock and your few acres leaves you abundant leisure.

The waters abound in fish. There is plenty of game for the sportsman. You will find time to boat, bathe, fish and hunt to your heart's content. The scenic beauties of this favored region, its delightful climate, its many charming communities scattered along the sound, form a combination of advantages hard to beat.

We invite the most searching investigation of hard-headed business men, who know a good thing when they see it.

WHAT YOU GET FOR YOUR MONEY

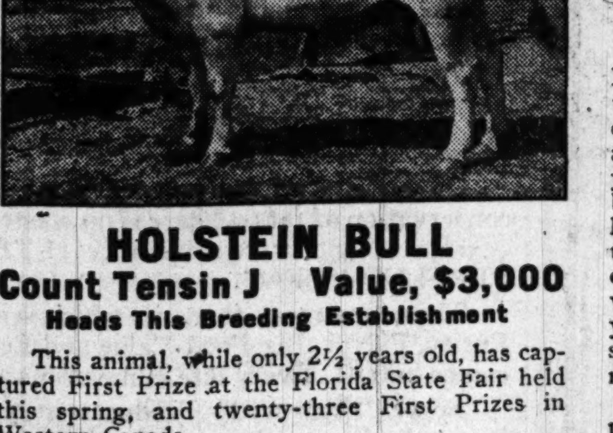
For the sum of $1,000 we will sell you one of our Newport Home and Farm Estates, consisting of five acres of land, to be stocked with cattle, hogs and sheep. Easy terms of payment if desired.

The land will be cleared and ready for cultivation. We will also deed you a Villa Site in the town of Newport, located on Santa Rosa Sound, where you can build you a little home among the stately oaks.

The Newport Estates Stock Farm will also enter into a contract to breed, feed and care for your live stock for a period of five years and at the end of that period we will agree to deliver to you two high grade milk cows, two brood sows and two ewes.

We will render you this service, giving you the benefit of our high-priced breeding stock, a trained organization of expert live stock men, the advantage of modern machinery necessary for the economical management of the farm, and also the use of the balance of our vast acreage for grazing purposes, and for our services we are to receive one-half the net profits from the operation of your land and live stock.

Your revenue during that period may exceed your whole investment.



HOLSTEIN BULL
Count Tensin J Value, $3,000
Heads This Breeding Establishment

This animal, while only 2½ years old, has captured First Prize at the Florida State Fair held this spring, and twenty-three First Prizes in Western Canada.

Besides this magnificent animal, our breeding establishment includes some very fine specimens of Holstein cows, Berkshire hogs and blooded sheep.

Our superintendent of live stock is a man of wide experience in the breeding and raising of cattle, hogs and sheep.

BE ONE OF THE "400"

Four hundred complete Newport Home and Farm Estates is the maximum number to be sold under this plan. Only 2,000 acres of our holdings are to be divided into five-acre income-producing tracts, with live stock and Newport Villa Sites included.

Each of the four hundred owners of Newport Home and Farm Estates secures the benefit of a large and well equipped organization in the development of his land and live stock. You can take possession of your Newport Villa Site any time, build your bungalow, beautify your lot and live in this land of delight. You can raise fruits, vegetables and chickens on your lot. At the end of five years your nearby Farm Estate, with its stock and crops, will be ready for you. We are establishing a community of substantial, home-loving people—congenial neighbors and good citizens.

GREAT ACTIVITY IN SHIPBUILDING AROUND NEWPORT

Wonderful industrial development is taking place all around Newport—particularly in ship building.

At St. Andrews Bay, about forty miles east of Newport, the Emergency Fleet Corporation is constructing a $5,000,000 shipyard which will employ a great many workmen, while at Pensacola, thirty-six miles West of Newport, the Pensacola Shipbuilding Company is making immense additions to its plant in order to take care of big orders from the Government.

Officers of the Pensacola Shipbuilding Company state that within sixty days they will have six thousand men at work turning out ships at a rapid rate.

Besides these two plants, there are two other big shipyards at Milton, within thirty-five or forty miles of Newport. These enterprises are bound to bring in tens of thousands of skilled artisans who will spend a vast amount of money.

The shipbuilding plants are near enough to be of material value. They will benefit us by creating more markets for our products, but are far enough away so as not to be a detriment to an ideal home community such as we are establishing at Newport.

TRIBUNE: JULY 28, 1918.

GERMAN MONEY USED BY U. S. TO BEAT U-BOATS

$5,000,000 Shipyard in Florida Will Be Built with Kaiser's Cash.

A shipyard that will cost $5,000,000 is to be built at St. Andrews bay, Florida, by a Chicago firm, with German money, and the yard will be on land that has been taken away from Germans.

Contracts to build the yard and to proceed at once with the construction of eight barges have been let to the Bates & Rogers Construction company, 376 Old Colony building. The contracts were let by the Emrgency Fleet corporation. The money will be furnished by A. Mitchell Palmer, alien property custodian. Mr. Palmer has also furnished the site. It is expected that the first ship will be launched in five months. After that there is to be one launching a month.

Officials Are Interned.

St. Andrews bay is sixty miles east of Pensacola. For twenty-three years the German American Lumber company has been operating a lumber plant at this point, but recently its activities were checked and the officials of the company were interned.

The Germans had acquired 150,000 acres of pine land, evidently as the result of a carefully planned campaign. It has been discovered that the principal owner of the company was Prince Fuerstlich Schaumber von Hoofkomer, of Bremen.

DENEEN FACTION TAKES STAND TO BEAT THOMPSON

Formal Statement Disputes Brundage Regulars' Implication.

The Deneen Republican organization will fight to the limit to defeat Mayor Thompson for the Republican nomination for United States senator. This is the definite statement issued last night from Deneen headquarters as a reply to the charge fired from the Brundage regulars, that suggested that there might be subterranean political connection between the Deneen faction and the city hall crowd.

The statement did not place the Deneen forces behind either McCormick or Foss. "The progress of the campaign is sure to indicate within a short time who is the strongest and best man for United States senator to represent the party and to represent Illinois in Washington," says the statement, which bears every evidence of having been written by former Gov. Deneen himself. "It will be time enough to determine that question as the campaign wears on," the statement says. "Our faction was not only opposed to Mayor Thompson for mayor and for National committeeman, but is as strenuously opposed to him now for United States senator."

The Deneen Statement.

The Deneen statement, adding another sizzling chapter to the Republican county feud, says:

"The statement published yesterday by the Galpin-Brundage faction was characteristic. Neither Mr. Galpin nor Mr. Brundage could stand sponsor for it, because of their close relations with Mayor Thompson, and it is issued in the name of Mr. Weber, secretary of the committee, who resides at Blue Island.

"The charge made by the Deneen faction was that Mayor Thompson was nominated through a coalition with the Galpin-Brundage faction. This is not denied, but it is attempted to evade the force of the charge by stating that other Republicans supported Mayor Thompson for election. It is then charged that the Deneen faction also supported Mayor Thompson for election. This is true, but the Deneen faction strenuously opposed his nomination. It is hard to see what offense the Galpin-Brundage faction can take against our faction for supporting the regular nominee of the party after the primaries, unless it be that such a course is out of harmony with the practice of the neutral-loyalist faction in bolting regular Republican nominations.

"Manifestly Evasive."

"The Galpin-Brundage faction statement then says that their support of Mayor Thompson was short. But this is manifestly evasive, for it was still intact when the correspondence that was published was written, and it was carried forward later to Peoria when the Galpin-Brundage faction supported Mayor Thompson for national committeeman, and in the campaign in which they did support him and made possible his election. It was still intact when the coalition county ticket was made up in 1916, which was defeated, and it was still in working order in the election of Mr. Homer K. Galpin as chairman of the county committee through the aid of the Thompson forces, which had the largest faction on the committee.

"The same coalition was in evidence again in the vote to extend the terms of the county committeemen to four years, in 1917, in which these factions joined. In addition to all this, the Galpin-Brundage faction tried to continue the coalition within the past four months by endeavoring to get the Thompson faction and others to support a joint county and municipal ticket.

"On the contrary, the Deneen faction opposed Mayor Thompson for nomination; for national committeeman; it opposed the Thompson-Galpin ticket in 1916; it opposed the election of Mr. Galpin as chairman of the county central committee, and it opposed the extending of the terms of the committeemen to four years. It also opposed the coalition of Mayor Thompson and the Galpin-Brundage faction in nominating a ticket by which the offices would be distributed among the three factions without any real opportunity for review by the Republicans of this county.

As to Patriotism.

"Again, complaint is made because in every statement issued by us we do not renew our oath of allegiance to the country. It is not necessary that we do so, because our attitude has been consistent. But the Galpin-Brundage faction seems to think this necessary in order that they may be relieved of the implications of their own record.

"Last, the Galpin-Brundage faction charges that because we are not out supporting the candidacy of any one for the senatorship we are thereby dividing the vote which should be against Mayor Thompson. The inconsistency of this charge appears on its face. If we are not supporting any particular candidate at this time we are not dividing or influencing the political forces on the senatorship question. Neither are we trying to make the senatorship a cloak or a pretext to divert the issue from the fitness of candidates for the offices to which they aspire to the fitness or lack of fitness of senatorial candidates.

"Wide of the Truth."

"The implication in their statement that we are friendly to Mayor Thompson is not only without foundation, but seems to be maliciously wide of the truth. The basis of the statement is the pretense that the alleged confidential correspondence which was published could have been acquired by us in no other way than through intimate relations with Mayor Thompson. As was stated in the staement in which that correspondence was published, it was first published in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE on May 23, 1916.

"Our faction was not only opposed to Mayor Thompson for mayor and national commiteeman, but is as strenuously opposed to him now for United States senator. The progress of the campaign is sure to indicate within a short time who is the strongest and best man for United States senator to represent the party and to represent Illinois in Washington. It will be time enough to determine that question as the campaign wears on."

Politics Makes Nineteenth District an Oasis of Joy

BY JOHN KELLEY.

What with clambakes, picnics, moonlight sails, neighborhood dances, free vaudeville shows, and automobile rides voters of the Nineteenth Senatorial district are surfeited these days with amusements which help to make them forget the heat.

The quadrennial campaign for state senator and the biennial race for state representative are in full swing. John T. Denvir, the present senator from the district, is a Democrat. He says he likes the job, and is out again for the toga. A brave array of talent has entered the field against him. Lawyers, stationary engineers, street car conductors, cigar makers, and members of other trades and professions are candidates for the nomination. The race started with six Democrats in the field, but one of the entrants, Patrick F. Coffey, withdrew at the request of the "allies'" chief, William O'Connell. The "allies" is the name by which the Dunne-Lewis-Harrison ticket is known in the Nineteenth.

"Doc" Accepts Advice.

"Doc" Coffey, as he is called, was looked upon as a strong candidate, but Mr. O'Connell persuaded him that it would be a shame to spend a lot of money and lose out. Mr. Denvir was of the same opinion. He put his right hand on Mr. Coffey's left shoulder and said, "Doc, you're too good a scout to go down to defeat. Better lay off this year, and it will be to your interest. You're a young man, and there is plenty of time."

Of the three republicans who are out to win the nomination J. F. Hemmons, a clerk in the county building, polled 5,000 votes two years ago in the primary race for representative. He says he is going to cop the nomination, and that it will be Senator Hemmons after the November election.

The district sends three representatives to the general assembly. The incumbents are Solomon Roderick, Republican, and James C. McGloon and James T. Prendergast, Democrats. All of them have got the habit of going down to Springfield on Sunday night and coming back to town Friday night. They are out again, fighting in the first line trenches, and all of them are confident of going over the top.

Challenge to Foot Race.

But the other fifteen or twenty candidates are going to put up a battle which, from all reports, will eclipse anything ever seen in the Nineteenth district. James O'Brien, a clerk of the board of review, is out for the nomination and so is Arthur O'Brien, chief clerk of the Circuit court. Both are Democrats. Jerry McCarthy filed a petition to enter the primaries, but because none of the candidates would accept his challenge to run a foot race he has withdrawn.

"What's the use of fifteen or twenty of us running for the job?" said Jerry at a gathering of the candidates. "Let us decide who shall make the race by a sprinting contest. It's a nice little run up Harrison street from St. Louis avenue to Independence boulevard. Let us all enter the race and the first three to cross the wire are to be declared the nominees."

When it was learned that McCarthy had been training for two weeks at the Sears-Roebuck track his proposition was frowned upon.

Always Some Amusement.

The district embraces all of the Thirteenth and Thirty-fourth wards, a part of the Fourteenth and the towns of Berwyn and Riverside. Every night there is something doing in the way of amusement. John F. Berry, a clerk in the election commissioners' office, gave a moonlight sail on the lake to offset Jim McGloon's clambake, and Sol Roderick entertained his constituents with a vaudeville show to repair any damage that might have resulted from Attorney Robert Eberle's neighborhood dance. Candidates who do not own their own cars have autos placed at their disposal by friends, and if a voter in the Nineteenth district doesn't get a joy ride around the boulevards he has himself to blame.

Elmer L. King, one of the Republican candidates for representative, is blind. Two years ago he polled nearly 3,000 votes.

Sullivan Causes Interest.

Much interest is manifested in the outcome of the primaries on account of the recent removal from the district of Roger C. Sullivan. Paradoxically speaking, Mr. Sullivan is and is not a resident of the Fourteenth ward. On his removal to the north side he made the announcement that he retained his residence in Washington boulevard for the purpose of voting in his old precinct.

John V. Farwell Pledges Support to McCormick

John V. Farwell has written to Congressman Medill McCormick a letter pledging his support in Mr. McCormick's candidacy for the Republican nomination for United States senator.

"This country has found," said Mr. Farwell, "that early preparation and quick though wise action were the main requisites for victory in the present world war. To that end it has become more important than ever to have representatives in Washington who can get things done.

"I believe not only in your loyalty but also in your energy and ability to represent this state as it should be represented in these days of the great war. Important questions must be settled now and later. Whether they are settled right depends and will depend to a great degree on the kind of men elected as representative.

SENATE CONTEST ADDS INTEREST TO STATE FAIR

Hand to Hand Fighting Expected at Capital This Week.

Illinois senatorial politics will reach the hand to hand fighting stage at Springfield this week during the Illinois state fair. Congressmen McCormick and Foss will be there personally expecting to meet Republicans from all parts of the state. Mayor Thompson, according to announcement from his headquarters yesterday, will be among the missing. He is billed to speak in Duquoin on Thursday, already set as Republican day at the state fair. The statement was made that the mayor expects to keep his Duquoin appointment.

'Congressman McCormick will be in Springfield on Wednesday and Thursday. The sun parlor of the Leland hotel will be his downtown headquarters and a headquarters is to be maintained on the state fair grounds. Definite plans have not been announced for Congressman Foss, but he is expected to be in Springfield on Thursday, when the Republican state committee will be in session.

Lowden May Take Hand.

That Gov. Lowden may reach a determination to mix into the senatorial situation is figured as a possibility of the state fair politics. For the first time in history, the state fair precedes the state-wide primaries. With only three weeks remaining of the primary campaign after the fair, important developments are possible at any minute, in the judgment of Republicans who are doing state politics.

If the danger is found to be as real as has been reported during the last week, that a split vote as between McCormick and Foss might result in the nomination of Thompson, there is substantial foundation for the belief that the governor will take a definite stand behind one candidate. This candidate, it is known, will not be the mayor. Everything reported from down state tends to indicate that a large majority of Gov. Lowden's friends and appointees are now openly supporting McCormick.

Sullivan Aid for Lewis.

Announcement that Senator James Hamilton Lewis is on his way to Europe added a new angle to the Illinois senatorial situation. That he will not be back in Illinois prior to the Sept. 11 primaries is now recognized. The regular, or Sullivan, organization contributed notably to the joy of the campaign yesterday by issuing an appeal for support for Senator Lewis in view of his departure for "over there." Announcement of the senator's sailing, coupled with the regular statement, issued over the name of Chairman James M. Dailey, tended to indicate, politically, that Senator Lewis is entirely "off" the allied Democracy county ticket that was framed at the Hotel Morrison.

Statement by Dailey.

Chairman Dailey's pro-Lewis statement says:

"Senator Lewis has placed his duty to the country before his own personal interests as a candidate and accepted a mission from President Wilson which will prevent his active participation in his campaign for renomination and reelection. Democrats of Cook county, and particularly those of the regular organization, should make every effort to see that the senator does not suffer in any way as the result of his patriotism. Every effort must be made to roll up a tremendous vote for him on Sept. 11 to show how his support of the president and his policies is appreciated by the voters of Illinois.

POLITICAL NOTES

Senatorial Candidates Plan Busy Programs for Week.

MAYOR THOMPSON will continue his speaking trip through the downstate counties this week. Monday night he will be at Kankakee. He is scheduled for Centralia Tuesday. Wednesday he comes back to Chicago to preside over a session of the city council. He is to be at Duquoin Thursday, Harrisburg Friday, and Belleville Saturday. The mayor's headquarters reported that he was satisfied with the results of the week that ended last night.

Tomorrow morning is the first day for filing petitions for Municipal court offices with City Clerk James T. Igoe. Petitions sent through by the regular mail service are to have the right of way in determining the place of candidates on the ballot.

William H. Malone candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in the Seventh district, will make the dedication speech tonight at the dedication of the service flag of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal church, Fiftieth avenue and Irving Park boulevard.

Congressman Medill McCormick will be in Chicago tomorrow. Tuesday he goes through Dupage county. Wednesday and Thursday he will be at his Springfield headquarters at the state fair. Friday is to be spent in Fulton county and he will close the week with a massmeeting Saturday night in Peoria.

P. M'GILLIVRAY BEATS RECORD IN RIVER SWIM

Jackie Star Easily Is Victor in Annual Event; Laubis 2d.

Order of Finish

Herman Laubis, Great Lakes	35:18
F. R. Pickel, Great Lakes	37:57
C. F. Stephens, Great Lakes	38:32
C. R. Leach, Great Lakes	40:21

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

With the river and inner basin dotted with craft of various kinds manned by bluejackets, Perry McGillivray of the Great Lakes Naval Training station yesterday won the tenth annual river swim of the Illinois Athletic club and established a new record of 33:44 for the course, approximately two miles.

By use of his powerful crawl stroke McGillivray passed under the finish line at the Wells street bridge 200 yards in advance of his shipmate, Herman Laubis, who was thirty yards ahead of F. R. Pickel, of the naval station. Of the ten prize winners seven are in the service at either Great Lakes or in United States Naval Auxiliary Reserve school on the municipal pier.

Boats Manned by Sailors.

Before the swimmers were called to the starting points the boats which accompanied the swimmers were ordered out in the lake 100 feet. Every boat was manned by sailors, while the private and public launches carried hundreds of officers and sailors. The bridges and docks were lined with thousands of persons, but the blue and white of the navy always was in evidence.

The starters were sent away to a perfect start by Roy E. Davis, chairman of the tricolor club athletic committee. The swimmers had not gone thirty yards from the dock until McGillivray forged to the front by a scant two yards in advance of Laubis. As soon as Perry picked up his rowboat, which was in charge of Harry Hazelhurst, swimming instructor at the station, he settled down to a steady crawl stroke. He made a direct beat for the turning buoy and used as little effort as possible to draw away from the other contestants.

Use All Types of Strokes.

When the contestants were 100 yards away from the starting point they used all sorts of strokes. The crawl, breast, side arm, and single overarm were plainly in evidence, but the stroke used by McGillivray and Laubis soon carried them away from the field.

McGillivray rounded the first buoy, about 500 yards from the start, fifteen yards in advance of Laubis, who was an equal distance ahead of Stephens, who was in third place by a narrow margin over Pickel. After rounding the buoy Perry followed his boat in a direct line for the river.

Perry Increases Lead.

At this time McGillivray swam strongly and gradually increased his lead over Laubis to 100 yards when he entered the river. Aided by the current Perry bent to his task and increased his lead with every stroke. As he went under the Rush street bridge he was 150 yards ahead of Laubis, while Pickel passed Stephens at this point and went into third position.

As Perry went under the bridges and past the docks, he was given rounds of cheers and was urged on by frequent blowing of steamboat whistles. Although he had the race won easily, McGillivray had his mind set on a mark which will stand for some time, as there is no telling when he will be able to swim in the event again. Despite the shouts of the crowd to take it easy, McGillivray put forth all he had between the Clark street bridge and the finishing point and covered the distance in record breaking time.

Beats Handy's Record.

The former record for this swim was [illegible] and was made in 1911 by H. J. Handy, who swam under the colors of the Illinois A. C. Laubis, who finished second, swam the distance faster than the old record. His time was 35:18.

Miss Rebecca Wells of the Walton A. C. was permitted to swim, but not compete for any of the prizes, as women are barred in this event. Miss Wells swam the entire distance and finished in thirteenth place. Her time was [illegible].

Among some of the interested spectators were Ensign George Weed of the United States Naval Auxiliary Reserve school, and Ensign Michael McDermott, who is in the naval aviation service and leaves for France next week.

Aquaplaning Exhibition.

Before the race Mrs. Charles L. Brown, wife of the former I. A. C. plunger, gave an interesting exhibition of aquaplaning in the basin and river. Max Mott, the former I. A. C. swimmer, who is in the service of the officers' training school, was ordered to Cleveland last Friday night for fireboat service. Twenty-three swimmers started in the race and twenty-one finished. Nine of the starters are in the service and seven of them won prizes.

In the Wake of the News

By RING W. LARDNER

THE EPISTLES OF EDNA.

Chicago, Aug. 6.

Dear Warren:

Well, did you get back to camp all right? And did you have a good time in Chi? I am crazy to know what you did Sunday and I don't think you were very nice to only give me half a day and one short evening of your time. but I suppose little girls should be thankful for "small favors." Were you with Corporal Moon Sunday? Or did you stay home as you said you were going to? I'll bet you didn't, but that you went on another party, probably with Corporal Moon and Miss Cronin. I think she is awfully attractive, don't you? And are she and Corporal Moon engaged? Sometimes I thought they were and other times I thought they weren't, but even if they aren't I suppose it isn't his fault, as she is so attractive, though there are some things about her that I shouldn't think he would like in a girl, but then men don't have the same ideas on all subjects as girls do, and I have known men to be perfectly mad over a girl whom her girl friends thought was a mess.

Did you get back to camp all right? I suppose you did or I would of heard about it, though if I did hear it would have to be indirectly as you are the most silent person I ever knew on the subject of yourself. I suppose you are thinking "Well, that is one thing that cannot be said about her." Well, I know I talked a good deal about myself and I am ashamed when I think how much I did talk and I cannot help from wondering what Corporal Moon could of thought of me. Did he say anything about me? Or won't you tell for fear my feelings would be hurt? Please tell me what he did say no matter how unflattering it is. But probably he did not think it worth while to express an opinion one way or the other and I don't blame him with such an attractive girl as Miss Cronin to occupy his thoughts. She is an attractive girl, don't you think, and I wouldn't blame him if he were crazy about her. Is he? They made an awfully attractive couple, though I think he is much more attractive than she. He is perfectly dandy looking and I'll bet you are proud to have him for a pal. I don't believe I ever saw a man who looked so stunning in khaki, "present company always excepted" of course.

Did I thank you for the perfectly wonderful time you showed me? I suppose you are disgusted with me for being such a coward in the water, but honestly I am a perfect f—l about the water and I guess I was never cut out for an Annette Kellerman at least as far as the swimming part of it is concerned. I only wish I were as brave as Miss Cronin and I know you men admire a girl who can swim and do stunts like that and despise girls like poor little me who is scared to death of oodles and oodles of things such as water and great big soldier men. Miss Cronin is a regular "fish" isn't she? Of course I don't mean she looks like one, though her mouth did remind me of a fish's. There! I'll bet you will think I am terrible to talk like that about her, but I don't really mean it and I honestly think she is awfully pretty and attractive and I don't blame Corporal Moon for being crazy about her if he is. But she did look awfully funny in that bathing suit and it occurred to me that that was why she stayed out in such deep water was so she would be covered up. Some girls look stunning in bathing suits and others are perfect messes and you would think they would hate to put them on.

Did you get back to Camp Grant all right and when do you have another "leave?" When you see Corporal Moon please remember me to him and if he says anything about me please tell me even if he says he thinks I must be a perfect little f—l, which I know he must think from the way I acted and talked and I guess I must of been "crazy with the heat." Does he correspond with Miss Cronin? I suppose he does if they are engaged, but somehow I can't thing of him being engaged to her.

Well, I hope you got back to camp all right and if you care to write to me, I will be here till Friday night and after Saturday at the Belleview hotel, South Haven, Mich. Remember me to Corporal Moon and tell me what he thought about me and I'll bet he thought I was a little "it." EDNA.

WALLEN BREAKS WORLD'S RECORD OVER HALF MILE

New York, Aug. 10.—[Special.]—William L. Wallen of the Great Lakes Naval Training station set a new American record for the 880 yard swim in open tidal salt water when he swam that distance in 11:27 1-5 at the aquatic carnival tendered to the sailors at the Pelham Naval Training station by the Metropolitan association, Amateur Athletic union, this afternoon. The previous mark, two-fifths of a second slower, was made by Norman Ross.

Wallen was hard pushed by Ludy Langer, now a lieutenant in the United States infantry. Langer was right after the winner over the whole course, and finished only a yard and a half behind him. Harold Krueger of Honolulu finished third

LOUIS PETERS DEFERS RACES AT LIBERTYVILLE

The Libertyville race meet failed to materialize yesterday. According to Louis Peters, local horseman and sponsor for the meet, 400 horses and 1,500 drivers and helpers were to have participated in the races. The plan met with the organized opposition of the Lake County Law and Order league, under the leadership of the Rev. Thomas R. Quayle, who declared that the meet was a trap to fleece jackies.

It is now proposed to hold the meet the last week in August and the first week in September. The Rev. Mr. Quayle says it will not be permitted, an dboth sides are preparing for the battle

FRAZEE BLAMED FOR TURNING FIRE ON BAN JOHNSON

BY JOHN ALCOCK.

Hints of dissension in the American league quieted considerably yesterday when President Ban Johnson received letters from President Comiskey of the White Sox and Clark Griffith, manager and part owner of the Washington club, denying any connection with the statement attacking Ban which was given to the press at the Cleveland meeting of the league. Harry Frazee, prexy of the Boston Red Sox, is supposed to be responsible for the attack.

"I never saw any such statement," Comiskey said last night. "I doubt if there was any such statement. All my talking was done behind closed doors at the meeting. I aired my views of the proposition to close Aug. 20 and finish the world's series before Sept. 1. We decided to go through till Sept. 2, then play the world's series. That's all I had to do with the matter."

Griffith in Denial.

Griffith in his letter to Johnson said the statement was issued absolutely without his authority and that it originated with Frazee. Among other things the announcement stated Johnson had "bungled the affairs of the American league" by urging the club owners to close the championship season on Aug. 20 and play the world's series before Sept. 1, the date set by Secretary of War Baker for application of the work or fight order to baseball players.

It also declared: "From now on Johnson is through spending our money. The club owners are going to run the American league in the future. His policy of 'rule or ruin' is shelved."

The statement, bearing the supposed signatures of Frazee, Comiskey, and Griffith, was carried by Cleveland news bureaus, indicating some one at the Cleveland meeting did break loose just as the newspapers related.

Johnson, Back, Surprised.

President Johnson returned yesterday from an Indiana resort, where he stopped on his way home from Cleveland. He expressed surprise at the attack on him, and added he had received no intimation from Washington as to the administration's thought relative to baseball after Sept. 1.

"Two weeks ago," Johnson stated, "I wired President Minor of our Washington club to ask Secretary of War Baker if it would be permissible to play a world series after Sept. 1. I also sought information as to the propriety of allowing the schedule to lap over Labor day. Mr. Minor did not deem it advisable to approach the secretary on this subject. It is my conviction that if there is to be a world's series it should be finished by Sept. 1."

Ernie Shore's Navy Marks Send Him to Annapolis

Boston, Mass., Aug. 9.—Ernest Shore, former pitcher for the Boston American league club, passed his examination at the Harvard school for ensigns with such high marks that he was one of five picked to take a special course at the Naval academy at Annapolis, it was learned tonight. Shore, who enlisted in the navy with other teammates many months ago, was later transferred to the ensign school at Harvard.

THROUGH THE EDITORS SPECS

By HARVEY WOODRUFF

WHEN the last state legislature was in session THE TRIBUNE editorially advocated the passage of a bill legalizing boxing under restrictions safeguarding its conduct. The bill narrowly failed of passage.

If boxing were allowed in Illinois the fiasco by which the Salvation Army is deprived of a substantial sum for its overseas fund—money which would have provided hot coffee and doughnuts for the boys in the trenches—could not have occurred.

How much would have been realized from the proposed boxing show at Comiskey park between Camp Grant and Fort Sheridan representatives is, of course, a guess under the circumstances. Fifty thousand dollars would be a most conservative estimate. The Illinois State Council of Defense expected $70,000.

A boxing show at Camp Grant on July 4 netted over $21,000, and the attendance was almost wholly from Chicago and the cantonment, the soldiers paying only 50 cents admission each. With no railroad fare it is safe to say not only boxing fans, but those interested in the Salvation Army work would have flocked to Comiskey park.

This is no brief to find fault with the city officials. Perhaps other state laws have not been enforced as zealously—that's not the province of this department. Our point is that Illinois needs a boxing law, with a respectable and capable governing body to see that no abuses are tolerated.

Boxing is all right. It should be legalized, with adequate protection against a certain class of its camp followers.

JOIE RAY WINS THREE CONTESTS ON AKRON TRACK

Akron, O., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Joie W. Ray and Racine Thompson, I. A. C. men, electrified a large crowd at the first annual American industrial track championships today. Ray won the half, mile, and two mile runs. Thompson won the high and broad jump and javelin. Ray represented the Western Steel Car company and Thompson the Pullman company.

The meet was won by the Goodyear Rubber company, which scored 30 points. The Firestone Rubber company was second with 21 points, the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company third with 20 points. Western Steel Car and Pullman tied for fourth.

Twelve big corporations sent track teams to Akron for the meet, among which were Westinghouse, Willys-Overland, Sherwin, Williams, Pittsburgh Seamless Tube, and Hydraulic Pressed Steel corporation.

National officers were elected and the permanent organization expects fifty big corporations to compete next year.

Speaker and Ty Cobb May Join Navy Flying Service

New York, Aug. 10.—Tris Speaker and Ty Cobb are said to be ready to join the navy's aviation department as soon as the ball season ends. Speaker has made several trips in a seaplane and says he likes the game. He may apply for a commission and intends to report for duty at one of the naval stations down south. Cobb is married and has several children, but he seems determined to do something for Uncle Sam.

JEALOUS SOX WREAK WRATH ON INDIANS, 6-2

Spoil Flag Dream with 15 Hits While Quinn Holds 'Em.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—The White Sox perpetrated the dog in the manger act today. Coming into Cleveland they found the fans highly excited, tremendously enthusiastic over the chances of the Indians in the pennant race. Whereupon the world's champions vowed that since they could not win, the Cleveland lads should not, and began knocking them off.

And how well they succeeded. They licked those Indians, 6 to 2. They gave Jim Bagby one of the most artistic trimmings he has had in many a day. They mauled and they smashed the alleged deceivers of the right hand for fifteen hits, and every kind of a hit that can be made with a bat and a ball, save a homer, was represented.

Run Legs Off Gardeners.

After that game the Cleveland outfielders were in a state of exhaustion, while the infielders were happy—happy that one of the line drives had not incapacitated some one.

All of the Sox were in a belligerent mood. Every man on the club save Jack Quinn secured at least one hit, and since Quinn was serving in his best vein, holding the Indians to five hits, he felt quite happy indeed.

Chick Gandil and John Collins stood forth as the swatting heroes, Chick because of the number of his blows, Collins because of the quality of his lone hit. Chick slashed out three hits and chortled as he ran them out, for Gandil was chased by the local team at the start of last season and it gave him great pleasure to bring woe to his former admirers.

Shano's Drive Scores Three.

Shano's drive was the banner clout of the day, as it bumped the boards in left center with the bases jammed. When it was retrieved by the fleet footed Speaker Collins was perched on third, while three of his pals had crossed the plate. This came in the ninth and put a stop to what had been a nip and tuck fight.

Cleveland fans, still placing great store in the winning of the pennant by the Indians, turned out in great shape, and while the gathering would be called merely a crowd in the olden days, it was a throng as fans are numbered now. They cheered, too, in the second, when the Indians scored the first run of the contest. Bob Roth's single, his steal of second, a sacrifice, and Johnston's safe hit made this possible. The Sox tied it in the third, singles by Liebold and E. Collins and Gandil's sacrifice making it possible.

Liebold's Triple Breaks Tie.

This tie lasted until the eighth, when Liebold tripled and scored on Gandil's second hit. Then came the ninth and the blasting of all the hopes. Schalk singled as a starter, Quinn popped out, as did Good, and Liebold walked. E. Collins singled, so did Gandil, and one was in and the bases jammed when J. Collins stepped forth. He liked the second pitch, there was a white streak, an excellent back view of Speaker in pursuit, and the bases were empty, save for Shano, who stood at third.

Hits by Thomas and Graney and an infield out gave the Indians their final in the ninth.

HAL CHASE FIRED FOR THE SEASON

Cincinnati, O., Aug. 10.—Hal Chase, first baseman for the Reds and one of the greatest ball players of the major leagues, today was suspended for the balance of the season by Garry Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati club. The suspension followed a temporary suspension imposed by Manager Mathewson when Chase failed to take part in several games. The reason given for the suspension was indifference.

Sherwood Magee will be used at first base the remainder of the season.

E. COLLINS QUITS

White Sox Star Will Join Marines After Game in Boston Next Thursday.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 10.—Eddie Collins, second baseman for the Chicago White Sox, will play his last game this season at Boston next Thursday, leaving that night for Philadelphia, where he will join the marines, he announced today.

The recent order putting the ban on further enlistments will not affect Collins, as he had made his arrangements to join the navy before the order was issued, he said.

"Collins and I talked over the matter for a long time before he left," President Comiskey said. "He carries with him my very best wishes. If the rest of the club had acted as Eddie has done instead of running to paint and putty jobs we'd be up there now fighting for the pennant. I am proud of Collins, proud of McMullin and Risberg, and proud of every other man of my club who actually quit to get into the war. As a matter of fact, when I saw McMullin and Risberg thought they ought to enlist, I arranged for their reservations to the coast. I am delighted that the White Sox club was fortunate enough to include men of this caliber."

CARLSON OF GRANT FOOLS JACKIES, 2-1

Great Lakes, Ill., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Army and Navy collided today and the Army triumphed, 2 to 1. Mal Carlson, once a Pittsburgh Pirate star, was mainly responsible for Camp Grant's triumph over Great Lakes, baseball champion of the naval forces of Uncle Sam. Mal held the Jackie stars to three hits. It required a mighty home run smash to right by Spencer Heath in the ninth round to save Great Lakes the ignominy of a shutout.

It was the first half of a two game series, and probably 10,000 sailors and officers crowded into the new stand here to see the battle. The second game is to be played tomorrow at Ravinia park. Soldiers and sailors are to be admitted free, and civilians are invited to watch the fracas at a nominal admission fee.

Soldiers Swat Red Faber.

Red Faber, world series hero of the White Sox and victor in two combats over Rabbit Maranville's Atlantic fleet stars, was the victim of Camp Grant. Faber was hit freely, but only twice could the invaders bunch their hits for runs. They managed to push over one tally in the second frame, and what proved the winnnig marker happened in the sixth.

Reilly singled to left and stole second after one was dead in the second. Beall flied, but Hugh Sweeney drove home the run with a warm smash to right. Aaron began the sixth with an infield safety. Debus, another former Pirate, fanned. Marriott, a Cub for a few minutes, hit safely, moving Aaron to second. On Brennigan's roller, Joe Leonard threw late and the sacks were filled. Beall drove a hit past Thomas at third, scoring Aaron, but Pattie Driscoll skidded over from short and intercepted the blow, cutting off a second tally.

Slips Can't Feaze Carlson.

Carlson was supreme throughout. The safe hits of both Johnson and Thomas were easy affairs. Grant fielded rather raggedly, but Carlson was too good to be disturbed by the boots behind him. Score:

BEZDEK'S TEAM SCORES TALLY, TYING IN NINTH

Visitors Fail to Hold Lead After Three Early Runs.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Rain and more rain crabbed Babe Adams' day at Forbes field today and the Cubs lost a chance to win a ball game which they had in their grasp by a score of 3 to 2 with two gone in the last half of the ninth inning. Pittsburgh tied the score and a deluge ended the battle at the start of the eleventh, 3 to 3.

Many doings planned to honor the come back of Babe Adams, world's series hero of 1909, were drowned out. These were to have been staged between two halves of a double header, but the first half never was finished, and Adams will have his day some other time.

Arrive in Town in Rain.

The Cubs rode into town this morning in a rain storm, which cleared away in time to permit starting play under conditions that were tough for the fielders. The field was slippery and the going slow.

Tyler and Cooper hooked up in a swell slab battle in spite of the conditions. The Cubs gained a lead of three runs in as many rounds, then Cooper stopped them flatfooted.

Tyler was invincible until the sixth, when the Pirates scored two runs, with the aid of an error by Deal. Tyler stopped them in the seventh and eighth, but a pass followed by a single and triple tied up the count in the ninth and before the tie could be broken a shower put the field under water for the rest of the day.

Wait Hour to Start Gain.

Waiting nearly an hour after the conventional time for starting double headers to permit the rain soaked grounds to dry out the Cubs began pegging away at Cooper's stuff until they had a lead of three runs in three rounds. These tallies were made one at a time.

Hollocher walked with one gone in the first inning. Mann scored him with a three bagger to center, but was left on third himself. Deal opened the second with a walk and was forced out by Zeider. Killefer's single drove Rollie to third. Tyler forced his catcher at second, but Cutshaw relayed wildly for a double play and Zeider scored on it. Flack whiffed.

Hollocher Leads Attack.

Hollocher led the third with a single. Mann forced him at second, then made all the way to third on Paskert's single to right, and scored on Merkle's single past first. Paskert tried to reach third on this swat, but was thrown out, and Merkle was doubled up trying to make second on the play.

Tyler held the Pirates to two hits for five innings, then Manager Bezdek sent some fresh troops into his lineup and began a strong counter attack.

Boone replaced Ellam with one out in the sixth and singled. Leach took Bigbee's place and doubled. Carey looped a Texas leaguer to center, scoring Boone. Southworth popped out. Cutshaw walked. Mollwitz hit to Deal, who threw wide to first and let Leach score. McKechnie skied out.

Pirates Tie Score in Ninth.

The Pirates subsided until the ninth; then Tyler slipped a pass to Cutshaw, and it proved his undoing. Mollwitz sacrificed. McKechnie singled to right and a swell throw by Flack nailed Cutshaw at the plate. Old Bill Hinchman took Shaw's bat and whaled a three-bagger to center, tying the score. Carter replaced Tyler and fanned Cooper.

The Red Tops, the champion colored aggregation from New York, handed Garden City a 6 to 1 defeat yesterday at the latter's park. Notes of the Sox

Cleveland, O., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Pinelli, the recruit, hit nicely. He secured two hits and Chapman robbed him of another by a leaping one hand stab.

Two games tomorrow, and Rowland says he will pitch Cicotte and Shellenback. Looks like more trouble for the Indians.

The Sox secured at least one hit in every inning save the seventh. Just why they didn't clout safely in that frame is a mystery.

The mighty Speaker did not get a hit, and the only ball that he drove out of the infield was a foul which Liebold captured.

When you meet a Cleveland fan who thinks the Indians have a chance for the pennant you meet one who favors a world's series. When you meet one who thinks the Indians without a chance you meet one opposed to a post-season series. Strange.

New York, Aug. 10.—The Giants defeated Boston in a double header, 2 to 1 and 4 to 3. Compton's work featured New York's playing in the first game. After Boston tied the score in the ninth, Compton threw out a runner at the plate, and in the second half his third hit drove in New York's winning run.

The Giants also won the second game in the ninth after Boston had tied in the first half. With two out Rariden walked and scored on Perritt's double. Scores:

GREAT LAKES MEETS CAMP GRANT TODAY ON RAVINIA DIAMOND

Smarting under their 2 to 1 defeat at the hands of Camp Grant yesterday, the Great Lakes baseball team today will meet the soldiers in a second game at Ravinia park. It will be played under the auspices of the Ravinia club.

The thousands of sailors and soldiers having liberty are sure to take advantage of the club's hospitality to help cheer their teams to victory in a game which will go a long way toward settling the service baseball supremacy in the central west. As men in uniform will be admitted free, the largest crowd that has ever passed through the gates at the north shore park is expected to be present.

Club Booster for Fighters.

Officers of the Ravinia club have worked tirelessly for the interests of the men in the service. Over 20,000 have accepted the hospitality of the club, while supper has been served to over 16,000. The war recreation board of Illinois has given the work generous support.

In order to arouse interest in today's game "pluggers" have been sent to both camps. "Navy! A-hoy!" and "Army! 'Tention!" are the captions on the bills. Another plugger has been distributed in public places. It calls attention to the game as one worth going miles to see.

Game Starts at 3 o'Clock.

There is intense athletic rivalry between the service teams and the full strength of both forces will be thrown into today's battle. The rival managers had not decided upon their hurlers last night. The game will start promptly at 3 o'clock. Ravinia can be reached by taking the Northwestern railroad or the North Shore electric. The price of admission will be 50 cents, and those wishing to see the game are requested by the club to arrive early. Following is the probable lineup of the teams:

Inquisitive Fans

Chicago. [Editor of The Tribune.] A is on third base, B on second base and two out. C bats a fly to left field on which A and B come home and he himself goes to third, cutting both first and second. Umpire notices the cutting and so do first, second and third basemen, each calling for the ball. Shortstop fields the ball to second baseman, who tags that base before C. can return. [1] According to what rule should the runs score? [2] Suppose an infielder had tagged C what effect would that have on the scoring of the runs? [3] Inasmuch as C is put out before he has legally become entitled to first what difference does it make in what manner he is put out or by whom? M. H. L.

Answer: [1] The runs do not count. [2] No effect. [3] No difference.

Bloomington, Ill. [Editor of The Tribune.] Man on second. Pitcher winds up and in the act of delivering the ball to the plate loses his grip on it and the ball falls to the ground and rolls off between third and home. Runner on second advances to third before ball is recovered. Umpire calls ball and makes runner return to second. Right or wrong? F. E. B.

Answer—Decision was wrong. It was a balk and the runner was entitled to advance anyway.

ZANDER BREAKS WORLD RECORD AT STOCKHOLM

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 10.—At Stockholm's great stadium on Wednesday night Zander again lowered the world's running record, doing 3,000 meters in 8:33:1.10. This broke his former record of 8:34:8.10. The program announced him the recordbreaker and he made good this claim. He was in excellent form. Almost from the first lap spectators foresaw a record broken and excitement grew as his opponents gradually dropped out, leaving him to make a brilliant finish.

World's Half Mile Record for Dirt Track Broken

Burlington, Ia., Aug. 10.—The world's half mile dirt track automobile record was broken today by Jerry Wonderlich driving a Simplex. He made the distance in :32.

Notes

Pittburgh, Pa., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Back home tomorrow.

Pick wrenched his back in yesterday's game at Brooklyn and Deal went back on the third base job for a spell.

Looked like old times to see Tommy Leach and Bill Hinchman breaking into the limelight again.

Hollocher skidded ten feet in the mud going after Cooper's grounder in the third inning, but righted himself in time to throw his man out at first.

Cubs and Pirates left here tonight for Chicago, hoping to be able to stage a double header on the north side tomorrow.

A brass band was the only Babe Adams feature in evidence. It was drowned out, too, after performing during the first game.

Tyler made the mistake of striking out the first man who faced him. He could not win after that and was lucky not to be beaten.

Hans Wagner was among the 7,000 spectators. He is twenty pounds heavier than he used to be, but still able to make the presentation speech when Babe Adams gets his day.

CAMP ROBINSON LOSES 4-2 CLASH TO NORMAL NINE

Walks Give Locals Three Runs at Start and Beat Soldiers.

The team of Camp Robinson, Sparta, Wis., lost the first game of a two day series with the Normals at Normal park, 4 to 2. Posenka's wildness in the first inning enabled the Normals to put three runs over the pan, but after that he pitched a good game, especially in the pinches.

The Robinson men made their two runs in the second on three hits, by Sweeney, Kelly, and Murphy. The game was full of fielding features, the work of Marmitt at short for the Normals being giltedged, while the soldier outfield pulled down many hard chances. Glaser pitched a steady game for the Normals. Score:

PAIGE
The Most Beautiful Car in America

Satisfaction

The Paige has long been regarded as a "preferred investment" in the Motor Car field. It is the choice of men who look for enduring quality rather than mere surface veneer.

Look around a bit and you will discover that there is no such thing as a "luke-warm" Paige owner. Satisfaction is never expressed in that way, you know—and Paige owners are permanently satisfied.

EVENLY MATCHED STARS PLAY AT BEVERLY TODAY

Jock and Bob to Tackle Chick and Frank Adams in Red Cross Clash.

Red Cross Golf

Place—Beverly Country club.
Time—2:30.
Players—Evans, Adams, Hutchinson, MacDonald.
Location—Eighty-seventh street and Western avenue.
Route—Rock Island line to Beverly Hills, bus to club. Auto—West on Fifty-fifth street to Western avenue and south to club.

BY JOE DAVIS.

Jock Hutchinson of Glen View and Bob MacDonald of Indian Hill will meet "Chick" Evans of Edgewater and Frank Adams, the home professional, in a Red Cross match at the Beverly Country club this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The match is open to the public.

The Scotch team has lost only two Red Cross matches this year, Evans and Walter Hagen defeating them at Edgewater, and Pat Doyle and Tom Boyd, the eastern experts, winning an extra hole match at Ridgemoor two weeks ago.

Adams Holds Course Record.

Evans and Adams should make a strong team, especially as Frank has been performing finely in his recent games. Last week he set a record of 65 for the 6,050 yard course, cutting two strokes off his previous mark. Taking this as a basis, the winning team tomorrow should have the best ball of about that mark, playing normal golf, and with a little luck a 63 would not be phenomenal.

The dry weather has made the fairways lightning fast, and as all four players are strong drivers, there should be a plethora of long hitting. This feature will add interest to the play at the third hole, which is 600 yards in length.

All Four in Fettle.

Chick and Jock had no exhibition games since last Sunday and have had a chance to rest. MacDonald gave a great exhibition at Old Elm last Sunday, and if he goes as well today the two homebreds cannot afford to make any mistakes.

Charley Burras of Glen Oak will auction the caddy privileges, and a bevy of fair Beverlyites will have charge of badges. A band from the Great Lakes will play during the afternoon.

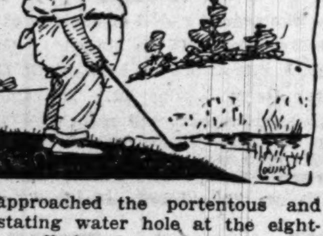
TALES of A TEE-BOX TOURIST

THERE is a water jump at the eighteenth hole at Glen View, which not infrequently is the despair of aspiring golfers, partocularly those who have achieved something of good fortune in the first nine holes.

Percy Hammond has disported himself ambitiously over the first nine holes and over most of the second nine.



He approached the portentous and devastating water hole at the eighteenth, suffering from something akin to incipient hydrophobia. Several amphibious tee shots, and others on his journey to the green and thence to the cup brought his total to 13. It was a moment when one remark from any other of the foursome would have spelled a fearful doom. Mr. Hammond's soothing performance on the first nine was shattered and rendered mockery. He scanned the pesky water hole and observed:

"Well, if I ever become a member of this club I'm only going to join the first nine holes."

TRANSFER CUE AMBULANCE FUND

At a meeting of the National Billiard advisory board yesterday at 623 South Wabash avenue, with Tom Foley in the chair, Maurice Daly Sr. and Charles P. Miller of New York, both members of the national board, were instructed to make arrangements for the transfer of all books of record and the funds, which amount to $8,373.78, of the American Billiard Players' Ambulance Fund Association of New York to the Brunswick-Balke-Collender company of New York, which will act as custodian of the funds and records until other disposition is ordered by the national board.

This action was taken because other billiard centers were not satisfied with the progress made in New York.

SPEED, BRAINS, LAND DEMPSEY CLOSE TO TITLE

Jack Faster than Rivals and Mighty Hard to Hit in the Ring.

BY RAY PEARSON.

"Why is this heavyweight Jack Dempsey such a whale in the ring? How did he happen to clout Fred Fulton, the Rochester giant who was supposed to be the closest rival of Champion Jess Willard, to the mat in twenty-three seconds?"

These were the questions popped at us a few days ago and it is worth mentioning that the man who asked is a regular in the fistic game, a fellow who follows the game from morning to night and dreams about it while asleep. He's not the kind to jump at conclusions, but he wagered a good piece of money in Chicago that Fulton would beat the "Submarine Destroyer."

No Surprise to Jack's Friends.

So much for that sort of dope on wagering. The man who picks the winners in the ring has much to take into consideration before he can figure out to his own satisfaction why this or that man should win. Even at that the dope often is upset, but in the case of this Dempsey person and his recent knockout of Fulton there wasn't any great surprise except to the people who don't "know" Dempsey.

If this dope goes wrong the writer never again will say that he knows what a real fighter looks like. In all the time I have watched the boys swat in the ring, I never have looked on a heavyweight as well qualified to rule as this Jack Dempsey.

Dempsey's Qualifications.

It is no exaggeration to say that Dempsey has "everything" that goes to make a remarkable heavyweight. He has speed; he has two good hands, in either one of which he packs a punch that rocks 'em to slumberland. In those two essential points he has all other heavyweights, who are comparatively slow, backed off the boards. Try to count the number of successful two handed battlers and the matter of enumeration is not difficult.

But that is only a part of the possessions of Dempsey. To back up his wonderful physical endowment, he has a fighting head. By that is meant that Dempsey is fully capable of doing his own thinking. He doesn't fight on instructions from his corner, and it is doubtful if he could do it.

Knows More Than Seconds.

When the gong rings it is Dempsey's business to go out and win without advice. His manager and his seconds have found that he knows too much for them; that they cannot be helpful to him in any other way than in getting him into condition for his battles, then taking care of the usual between rounds routine.

The great success achieved by Dempsey on attack has prevented many fans from knowing much about his defensive ability; so a word or two concerning this may prove of interest. With all his great success the "Submarine Destroyer" is just an ordinary fighter on defense, as defense goes in the makeup of most boxers. Jack is not a great blocker or a wonderful staller, but just the same he is one of the hardest fighters in the game to hit.

"He Ain't Where They Aim."

The answer to that is that Jack's cleverness is in his feet, the assistance of an able head of course being mighty valuable. Always on the move, in and out, and always hitting, he is no easy target for his foes. "He ain't where they aim their shots" is one way a fan who saw him fight Bill Brennan stated the case after that contest.

Dempsey had Fulton figured out very nicely several weeks before he met the Rochester giant in the ring. He told the writer: "I will knock out Fulton in one round, just as I have nearly all my opponents." The result of that fight certainly indicates that Jack thinks and thinks correctly.

Modest as Big Kid.

Some folks might believe that Dempsey is egotistically inclined by the above prediction, but it was not made for publication, and nothing is farther from the truth. This new heavyweight upstart, alias the "big kid," is as modest a person as any one would care to meet. He carries his honors lightly and would rather talk on a subject other than pugilism. That he is modest is indicated by a letter he wrote a few days ago. It was after he knocked out Fulton. His only reference to that victory was: "Well, old pal, the big fight is over!"

SAILOR BOXERS MUST OBEY RULE

Great Lakes, Ill., Aug. 10.—Surgeon J. B. Kaufman, athletic officer at Great Lakes Naval Training station, announced a boxing policy for glove artists of the station similar to the stand taken by Maj. Gen. Thomas H. Barry in regard to the bouts at Fort Sheridan after their banishment from Comiskey park by the Chicago police.

Dr. Kaufman stated the policy of the station in exhibition bouts is to allow no boxer to show where the ring sport is prohibited unless he has a written request from the mayor or chief of police to the athletic officer of the station. The occasion for this announcement was an unauthorized advertisement that Bennie O'Keefe of Great Lakes would box Spike Kelly at the Riverside Social club next week.

Woods and Waters by LARRY ST. JOHN

IN PRAISE OF MIDWEST BASS STREAMS.

WAY back in sixteen hundred and something, just about the time our Pilgrim Fathers landed on Massachusetts' rock bound coast, an old angling writer in England expressed a wish for a stream full of "freckled fishes" flowing through his rose garden.

Offhand, one would say that such a wish never could be realized—at least not in this workaday world. But we know a man who has a fine swift stream flowing through his apple orchard. This stream contains no "freckled fishes," but in it are those knights in shining green armor—small mouthed black bass. This is, any sane person will admit, more blessing than any one man deserves!

You follow a winding footpath from the little green and white cottage down through the orchard to the toylike bridge that spans the river and get in the water there. We did it one spring morning when apple trees were in bloom. Perhaps you have forgotten your schoolday botany and with it the fact that the rose and apple belong to the same family. Some one has said that the rose is an apple with a college education, but we would venture the guess that the apple is a rose with a technical school training, being both beautiful and productive and reminding one of a good poet able to make a good living for his family. Thus we realized in a way the wish of a brother of the angle "now with God," as Walton referred to his departed fishing friends.

As we said before, we got into the river at the bridge and whipping out our fly—a Yellow May—we started downstream. The water was high and roily—conditions were against us—so we fished carefully and deliberately. High in an apple tree a thrush sang a little lay of a little lady soon to come from the southland, song sparrows and yellow warblers joined in the chorus, bees hummed, butterflies flitted and the stream gurgled like a happy kiddie making "scrumptious" mud pies.

At the third bend the flow of the waters had cut out from the bank, making a likely lair for a feeding bass. We let the current carry our fly under the overhanging bank, and sure enough we got a bass. That was the only fish we took, but that day will always stand out in memory as the best bass fishing we have ever experienced.

What we are getting at is this: Environment is what makes enjoyable fishing and while all bass streams do not flow through blooming apple orchards they always ramble through pretty and interesting country. If you haven't the means to go great distances for your fishing be not cast down. Any citizen of the middle west can reach a bass stream in an hour's ride or so, and that stream offers many things not found on the streams of some faraway land of our dreams. We have fished northern rivers for days without hearing a bird and when fishing in the mountains you hear only the ceaseless roar of rushing water.

Not so our midwest bass streams. Why they flow through birdland itself, where one always "heareth the melodyous harmony of fowles," as the good Dame Julianna Berners quaintly put it. Then there are hardwood trees, beautiful throughout the season; purple flowers and golden flowers you will find blooming together, every month from April to November, with here and there splashes of crimson of cardinal flower, Indian paint brush, and bee balm. Muskrats, minks, 'coons, squirrels, frogs, turtles—all the common folks of woods and waters are there for you to discover as you silently round the bends.

Blue jays and red squirrels "sass" you as you wade down, but you are at peace with the world and you smile indulgently or return the compliment, magnanimously, as did the president of the United States recently when a little girl stuck out her tongue at him.

Whether you catch many fish, big fish, or no fish matters little. If your creel is light, so is your heart; you angle for fish and catch—peace and contentment—and these are the things that men of holy callings, sages, and statesmen throughout the ages sought when they rose with the sun and traveled to the streams on dewy mornings. And these are what that old codger—peace be to his soul, in a land where east winds never blow—had in mind when he wished for a stream full of "freckled fishes" flowing through his rose garden.

CHAMPS GALORE FOR TRACK MEET AT NAVY STATION

C. A. A. Head and Great Lakes Officials Look for Big Success.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Following the announcement that the national A. A. U. track and field championships will be held under the auspices of the Chicago Athletic association at Great Lakes Naval Training station Sept. 20, 21, and 23, President Nelson N. Lampert of the Cherry Circle club was host to Capt. Moffett, commandant; Dr. John B. Kauffman, athletic officer, and other station officers at a dinner at the club, where plans were discussed to make the event the greatest ever held in this country.

"We intend to conduct this meet along the lines of our patriotic water carnival," Mr. Lampert said. "No admission will be charged. Capt. Moffett will see that the track and field is put in the best condition and that seats for all who wish to see the games will be erected. Capt. Moffett's enthusiasm has made the games possible."

Delaney Handling Entries.

Martin Delaney, athletic director of the Cherry Circle, is preparing entry blanks to send to all sectons of the country. Delaney knows where all last year's champions in the service are stationed and he has written them in regard to the meet.

A number of last year's champions are in the central west and are almost sure to compete. Andy Ward, national sprints champion, is in service at Great Lakes. Andy has been keeping in shape by running every day in one of the big drill halls, and welcomes the opportunity to defend his laurels on the station's cinder path.

Knourek Also at Station.

Another champion at the station is Eddie Knourek, who won the pole vault last year while wearing the colors of the Illinois A. C. Eddie has been devoting a lot of his spare time to pole vaulting, and although he has taken on weight has little trouble in clearing the bar at 12 feet.

Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C., who won the mile in the championships last year, is hammering rivets for the government in a plant in Pullman. Ray has said he will break the one mile outdoor record of 4:12 3-5, held by Norman Taber, in this year's championships, and he will now have the opportunity. He will be a sure starter.

Frank Shea at Boston.

Frank Shea, sensational quarter mile runner of the University of Pittsburgh, who equalled the world's record of :47 2-5 in the eastern intercollegiate this year, is in the ground school at Boston Tech. According to a letter received from Shea by Delaney, the latter is training to set a mark which he intends to call "Made in Germany."

M'KERRON WINS FEATURE EVENT

Light fields furnished the racing at yesterday's West Side matinée, as most of the horses are awaiting the next two big Saturdays when prizes are to be awarded. Electric McKerron won the free for all trot after Fred R. had annexed the first heat. In the third mile the last half was trotted in 1:06. Chango, the big California pacer, owned and driven by John Bangert, showed a return to his old time form after a long spell of sickness. Chango easily won the 2:20 pace in 2:19 and 2:17. The veteran Doctor Brown came to life in the 2:25 trot and beat the youngster Charley Hazzard. The Raven landed the only split heat race of the afternoon, the 2:30 trot. Summaries:

2:30 trot—The Raven, blk. g., by Royal Sprague [Dipmore], won; Hollyrood Red Fern, second; W. F. G., third. Time, 2:31; 2:29; 2:29.

Free for all trot—Electric McKerron, br. g., by John A. McKerron [Harris], won; Fred R., second. Time, 2:19½; 2:18¾; 2:15½.

2:25 trot—Doctor Brown, br. g., by Electropoise [Burke], won; Charley Hazzard, second. Time, 2:33½; 2:29¾.

2:20 pace—Chango, b. g., by Copa de Oro [Bangert], won; Elastic Pointer Jr., second Time, 2:19; 2:17.

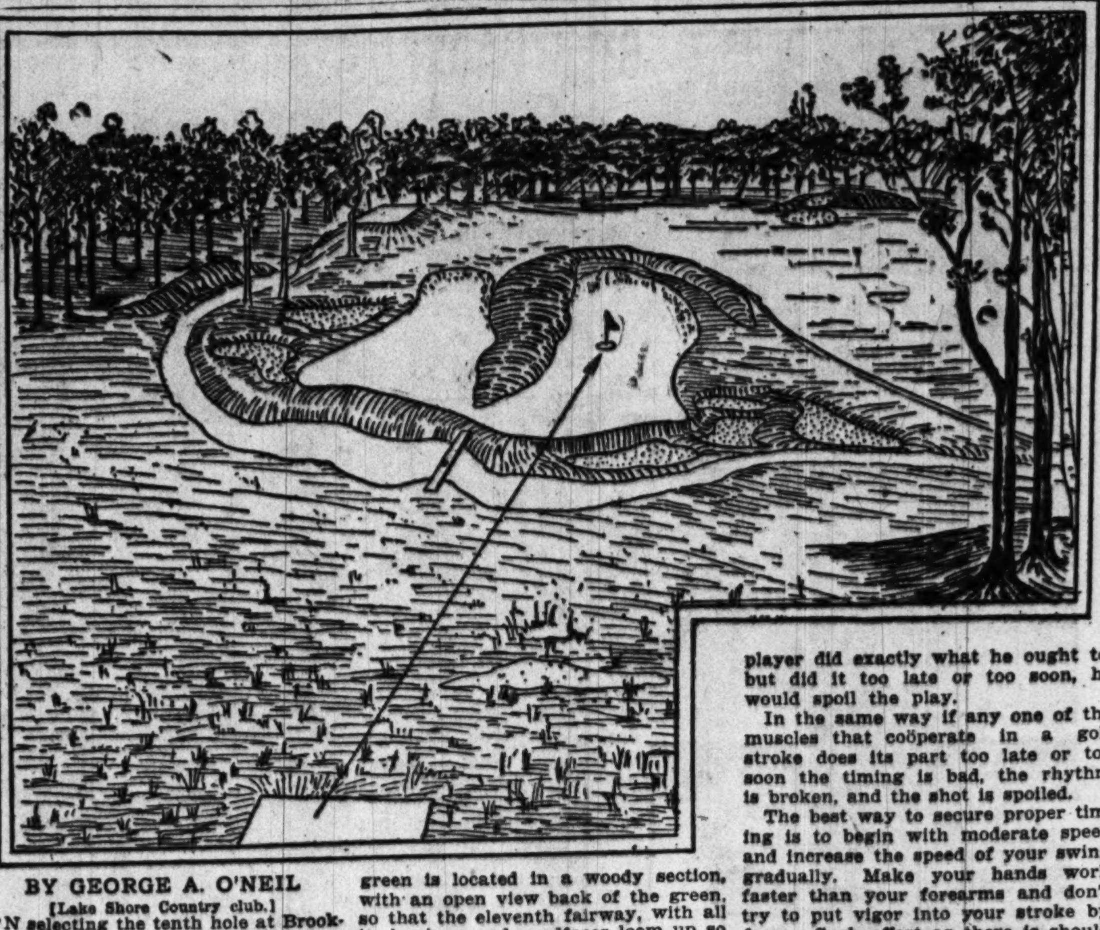
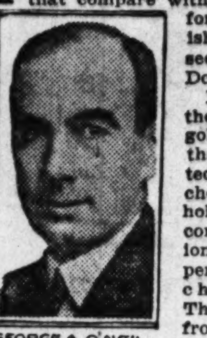
TENTH HOLE AT BROOKLINE CHOICE OF ROSS

Noted Course Architect Picks a "One Shot" Test for O'Neil's Ideal Course.



BY GEORGE A. O'NEIL
[Lake Shore Country club.]



GEORGE A. O'NEIL
WEED PHOTO

IN selecting the tenth hole at Brookline Country club, Donald Ross admits that there are several holes that compare with this one. But for a natural finished hole this one seems faultless to Donald.

It may surprise the majority of golfers to learn that this architect (de luxe) has chosen a one shot hole, but it is the consensus of opinion among the experts that he has chosen wisely. This hole is one from the famous course upon which Ouimet tied and then beat two of the greatest golfers in the world, Vardon and Ray, during the open championship that will live fresh in the minds of all golfers during the present generation.

The tenth hole is 175 yards in length, with the tee elevated sufficiently to enable the player to gain a full view of all the sharp undulations on the green, also to see well down to the bottom of a yawning pit which thoroughly guards the green and allows nothing but a perfectly hit ball to pass. A ridge running through the green increases the difficulty of negotiating a second shot should the player be unfortunate enough to find it between his ball and the hole.

This very sporty but legitimate green is located in a woody section, with an open view back of the green, so that the eleventh fairway, with all its bunkers and sandfaces loom up so artistically that Donald favored this hole.

In a recent issue of this paper I offered prizes for any readers who guessed correctly the hole and course picked by Donald Ross. Many answers were received, but only one named the course. Jack Croke of Exmoor therefore is awarded first prize, although he did not name the correct hole.

The best guesses, based on description and reasons for choice, are:

1—Jack Croke	Brookline
2—Elaine Rosenthal	Mayfield
3—Stewart Gardiner	Myopia
4—Harry Collis	Pine Valley
5—Art Fovargue	Indian Hill
6—Douglas Twedie	Old Elm

Answers to Queries

Question—What is meant by timing your stroke? How can I secure proper timing? J. C. B., Homewood.

Ans.—Every stroke in golf is the result of scores of muscles working together. Each muscle not only has its own work to do but also must do it precisely at the right moment to fit in with what the other muscles are doing, just as each player on a football team not only has his particular part in a complicated play, but also has to do that part precisely at the right moment to fit in with what the other players are doing. If a single player did exactly what he ought to, but did it too late or too soon, he would spoil the play.

In the same way if any one of the muscles that coöperate in a golf stroke does its part too late or too soon the timing is bad, the rhythm is broken, and the shot is spoiled.

The best way to secure proper timing is to begin with moderate speed and increase the speed of your swing gradually. Make your hands work faster than your forearms and don't try to put vigor into your stroke by force. Such effort as there is should come from the hands and should be directed to obtaining a smooth throw.

Question—How can I maintain a good rhythm and at the same time increase force to gain distance?
M. R., South Bend, Ind.

Ans.—Distance is not produced by force, but by speed of stroke. When a novice tries for distance he usually tries to hit harder. When an expert wants a longer ball he swings smoothly but faster. If you now have a good swing don't try to force it. Keep on swinging smoothly and gradually increase your speed. You will be getting longer shots with practically the same effort as your fingers become stronger and they depend less on your forearms, which enables you to get the break of the wrists.

This will be because you get speed from the action of your hands in addition to that from your arms.

Cut Your Gas Bills—Cylinders Free from Carbon

No longer need you pay high cost per mile for gas. For this wonderful device not only removes all carbon and keeps your cylinders clean, but it increases speed and power and reduces gasoline consumption from 25% to 40%. For complete combustion is secured. This attachment has been thoroughly tested. Large firms who scientifically investigated are buying this great invention for all their motor vehicles. The sales are tremendous. The price, $15.00, is a small price for this wonder worker, so these careful buyers tell us.

How This Necessity Works

Note the illustration above. The water taken from the motor drips into the valve. Here it is converted into steam, then uniformly injected into all cylinders by operating the control from the dash or steering column.

The extra hydrogen from the steam gives perfect combustion—develops all the power in the fuel. The oxygen keeps the cylinders always clean. Thus the engine operates 100% efficiently. Full power secured and used. So make the test at our risk.

Remember Our Guarantee

We say to you, test this American Steam Carburetor on your automobile, truck or tractor—gas or kerosene engine. After ten days if you are not satisfied that you are getting increased power and using less fuel, we will refund your money.

Can anything be fairer? Figure out what this will be worth to you. It will quickly pay for itself, then you save your money every time you turn a wheel. Why let this saving in gas slip by, especially now when gas is high—when economy is the watchword?

BANKERS INSIST TAX EXEMPTION BONDS WILL STAY

Nevertheless Maryland 4 1-2s Sell at 100.43 in Latest Bids.

BY GLENN GRISWOLD.

The majority of investment bankers insist they have no fears of the proposal of Chairman Kitchin that legislation be enacted eliminating the tax exemption feature from future issues of municipal bonds. They reassure themselves by referring to the opinions of eminent barristers that the constitution expressly prohibits such legislation.

Nevertheless their acts belie their speech. Should such a measure be passed and sustained for enforcement the demand for municipals and other tax exempt securities outstanding at present would boost prices far out of line with any standard of current security or money values.

The state of Maryland sold $2,500,000 serial 4½ per cent bonds, which were placed on public sale yesterday at unusually high prices. The successful bidder paid 100.43, at which price the bonds yield but 4.42 per cent. It is noteworthy that the Harris Trust and Savings bank bid a price to yield 4.60 per cent, while the National City company's bid was on a yield basis of 4.8 per cent.

Bond houses of this caliber do not vary thus far in their opinion of the worth of a bond unless there is some unusual and highly uncertain phase of the market situation to be considered. If Mr. Kitchin's proposal should prevail the successful bid would prove low and profitable; if not, the National City bid might prove a more accurate estimate of market values.

Buying of Better Sort.

Liberty 3½s remained at par, and all Liberty issues were advanced. Buying is of the better sort, there being several purchases and many bids for round amounts of $100,000 and more. All French issues were strong, but Paris 6s led with a gain of more than a point.

A beginning of the movement to market Canadian municipal and provincial bonds in this country as a means of correcting exchange conditions is seen in the sale to the Harris Trust and Savings bank and a syndicate of dealers of $1,000,000 province of Manitoba 6 per cent bonds due in 1928. The bonds were bought on a 4.70 basis. The capital issues has not passed on the issue, but a permit is expected, since the treasury department and the federal reserve board have assured the Canadian government that such financing might be done.

Bankers Have Rail Plan.

The Investment Bankers' association proposes to contend to the end for the inclusion in the contracts between the government and the railroads of specific provision for the payment of sinking fund and interest money in a separate fund which can be used for no other purpose and for the separate payment of dividend money where the government guaranty amounts to enough to afford dividends and the company has a dividend record.

The association considers the dividend question almost as important as that of interest since the laws of many states require that dividends on the stock be maintained in order to keep bonds in good standing as investments for savings banks.

RED CROSS JUNK BUREAU CHECKS JUVENILE CRIME

Dealers Trading with Children to Lose Use of Salvage Coupons.

The junk campaign of the Red Cross for the benefit of soldiers' families is not going to be the means of increasing juvenile delinquency. Rather it is expected to be the means of doing away with one of the largest sources of juvenile crime—the collecting of junk by children either through theft or in other ways.

A meeting was held yesterday at the Chicago chapter headquarters of the Red Cross, where Red Cross officials conferred with the heads of the Juvenile Protective association and plans were made for the absolute enforcement of the law regarding the sale of junk by children.

Warnings Sent Out.

John W. Champion, executive secretary of the Chicago chapter of the Red Cross, has sent out the following letters to housewives and to junk dealers:

"To the Housewives of Chicago: The Red Cross salvage bureau has joined hands with the Juvenile Protective association to fight an old evil. The collection and sale of junk by children should be stopped.

Ways to Help.

"The Red Cross appeals to you to help in the following ways:

"Pledge yourself, as 40,000 Chicago women have already done, to assist the Red Cross salvage bureau for the duration of the war by disposing of all your waste materials through said bureau.

"Deal only with junk dealers and peddlers who pay for junk with Red Cross salvage coupons.

"Do everything possible to prevent the collection and sale of junk by children.

Notice to Dealers.

"To all persons engaged in the junk business: The Red Cross has recently asked your coöperation in a plan to increase the collection of junk and turn certain money in to Chicago's Red Cross fund. We find, however, that some of those who have taken Red Cross salvage coupon books are violating the city ordnance which prohibits the sale of junk by children.

"The Red Cross will do everything possible to increase the sale of junk by the householders and business men of Chicago. It must be distinctly understood, however, that the Red Cross absolutely opposes the collection or sale of junk by children."

WARD STOCK UP TO PAR IN LOCAL EXCHANGE SALE

Montgomery Ward preferred sold at par yesterday for the first time since the stock was listed on the Chicago Stock exchange. The issue came within ¼ of par last month. The low in 1917 was 102. The high since its listing was 117½. There was no reason outside the market for the slump. A small block of stock was forced to liquidation when there were no bids in the market.

Swift was the only issue active enough to make a distinctive market and it closed unchanged. Wilson stock was up ⅛, while it was gaining a full point in New York. Cudahy at 114 showed a gain of 2 points. The attack by the federal trade commission had only a temporary effect on packing securities.

Sears-Roebuck was strong and the market full of bids at 139½, a gain of 2 points, but no stock was for sale after the transfer of an odd lot.

THREE BILLION BUSINESS DONE BY 5 PACKERS

Profit on Meat Less than Two Cents on the Dollar.

It is estimated by Armour & Co. on the basis of midyear statements from the five leading packers that the gross sales of the companies in 1918 will approach $3,000,000,000. On this amount the average net profit indicated will be between 2 and 3 cents on a dollar sold, but on meat the average profit is running less than 2 cents a dollar on sales, or below the limit allowed by the federal regulation restricting profits on meats to 9 per cent of capital invested. It is estimated that the capital employed by the five packers in their business at present exceeds $800,000,000.

Business for Three Years.

The five leading packers had gross sales aggregating $5,000,000,000 for the three year period 1915, 1916, and 1917. Average earnings in the same period were about 3 cents per $1 of sales, including even the most profitable nonedible by-product lines with the rest.

The 1918 indicated gross is an increase of a full third over last year and more than 100 per cent above the largest year before the world war. One packer alone slaughtered about 1,400,000 cattle in the first thirty-four weeks of his 1918 fiscal year.

Killings for War Period.

The total number of animals killed by the leading packers during the three fiscal years falling within the world war period and ending in the fall of 1917 was 105,000,000, classified as follows:

Cattle	17,000,000
Sheep	27,000,000
Hogs	61,000,000

It is calculated that the average receipts last year a head of cattle both from beef and by-products exceeded the cost of the cattle on the hoof by about $8.50, and that of this $8.50 the cost of dressing, selling, and freight used up about $7.40, leaving a net profit of $1.10, or a small fraction of 1 cent a pound for dressed beef.

Syndicate Members Not to Take Telephone Bonds

Boston, Mass., Aug. 10.—[Special.]—It is understood that the $50,000,000 American Telephone and Telegraph company 6 per cent convertible bond syndicate will be wound up next Wednesday and that the syndicate members will have to take no bonds.

Applications have been received for the comparatively small amount of bonds now remaining on hand, so that syndicate participants will be relieved of their liability as underwriters.

Liberty Loans Increase Savings.

The annual reports of the building and loan associations of the country throw much light on the effects of the recent Liberty loan campaigns. It has been assumed by most authorities that the Liberty loans were taking up the savings of wage workers to the exclusion of other forms of investment. That assumption appears to be incorrect. As the loan associations have nearly 4,000,000 members, most of whom are wage workers, evidently no better indication of the trend of small savings can be found than their reports.

It appears that when the first Liberty loan campaign started a considerable number of members withdrew from these associations in order to buy bonds or thrift stamps with their savings. They remained out only a short time, however. Within a few months most of them returned, resuming their former payments, and in some cases increasing them. The total membership grew and the average investment increased in 1917 from $448 to over $460 in 1918. Returning members generally said by way of explanation that they had been able to adjust themselves to new conditions and save more than before.

It appears from this that, as far as the savings investor is concerned, the Liberty loan has been increasing the savings of the country, rather than taking up the amounts already available. This state of things augurs well for the financing of the war, and also for the increasing wealth and prosperity of the country after peace is declared.

Goodrich.

F. R. S.—The Goodrich company has outstanding $25,500,000 of preferred stock and $60,000,000 common. Good will is carried in the balance sheet at nearly $58,000,000, or more than one-third of the total assets. The common stock represents more good will than tangible assets. Dividends have been paid on the preferred from the beginning. In 1917 14½ per cent was earned on preferred, compared with 12¾ in 1916 and 15¾ in 1915. For more than a year dividends have been paid on common at the rate of 4 per cent. Net working capital is large and the preferred stock is in a fairly strong position. The common is speculative, depending on continued good earnings. Earnings in the first half of 1918 were at a somewhat higher rate than in 1917.

Virginia-Carolina Chemical.

A. R., Bloomington, Ill.—The Virginia-Carolina Chemical company earned 24¼ per cent on its $27,984,400 of common stock in the year ended May 31 last, compared with 11 per cent the year before. The dividend on common has just been increased from a 3 to a 4 per cent annual rate and an extra of 2 per cent declared. Its record is not particularly encouraging. In the last fourteen years a total of 17 per cent has been paid on common stock. The 8 per cent dividends on the $20,012,254 preferred stock have been paid in full to date. Several payments, however, were deferred.

Brief Answers.

J. G. K.—The Glen Rock Oil company controls Wyoming oil lands, part of which are being developed by the Midwest and Ohio companies on shares. It has reputable backing, but until reports of production and earnings are available the stock will be merely a speculation.

A. H. B. and D. F. D., South Bend, Ind.—The Falls Motors corporation reported earnings at the rate of 14 per cent a year on common stock in the seven months ended May 1, 1917. No later figures obtainable. Common stock of $10 par is offered at $5 and $4.50 is bid.

C. S., Dallas City, Ill.—The First National Fire company failed last year. Presumably the receiver is now liquidating it. Stock is quoted at $2.25 bid, $2.75 asked. The company's policies were reinsured as of Sept. 20 last.

A. R., Forest Park, Ill.—No official information is obtainable from the United States Mortgage company.

Report on Cotton Crop Shows Big Falling Off

New York, Aug. 10.—The annual report of the secretary of New Orleans Cotton exchange covering the season from Aug. 1, 1917, to July 31, 1918, gives the total American cotton crop for the year at 11,906,973 bales, or 1,032,961 bales less than in the previous year.

At the average price per bale the last season's crop was marketed at a total of $1,718,176,204, the highest value in all history.

LONGS SELL CORN —TRADE BEARISH; RAIN REPORTS

Cash Houses Hedge Oats by Free Sales of Futures.

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

Liquidation and bear pressure made a weak set of coarse grain markets and the close at nearly the lowest prices yesterday showed losses of 2½@3⅛c on corn and 1⅛@1⅝c on oats in Chicago. Corn in the southwestern markets lost 2¼@3c, Kansas City leading, and oats were 1@1⅜c lower on the active trading futures. Kansas City led the decline in both grains. Oats in Minneapolis were 1⅛@1¼c lower and in Winnipeg were off ⅞c.

Closing trades, compared with a week ago, showed gains on corn of 1¼@3⅝c and oats ¾@2¼c, October leading in both grains. Pork closed with a loss of 55c and lard of 10c, while short ribs were off 25c to 37½c for the week.

Liquidation On in Corn.

Liquidation was on in corn and prices dropped 2½@3⅝c from the previous day, and closed within ¼@½c of the bottom on the active deliveries, with August at $1.56¾, September at $1.59, and October at $1.60¼.

Selling pressure increased materially and with stop loss orders caught on the way down many of the leading buyers of the previous days unloaded, and some of them took the bear side. The houses with Omaha connections, who have been the most conspicuous buyers of late, were very active on the selling side.

The best support came from holders of bids, and from shorts who were evening up over Sunday. Rains in the west with lower temperatures had considerable influence on sentiment, as did the extremely favorable war news from abroad.

Demand for cash corn was fair with sample values firm. Receipts 92 cars. Primary receipts for the week were about the same as last year, while shipments were slightly smaller. The weekly weather forecast indicated that temperatures in the region of the great lakes would be above normal, and while there would be showers around Wednesday throughout the west, no heavy precipitation was looked for.

Cash Oats in Sharp Decline.

Hedging sales and the break in corn started liquidation in oat futures and they declined sharply, at the inside figure showing 1⅝c under the previous day's finish. The break in the cash article was even more severe, 1½@1¾c, with the close at the inside, with No. 3 whites at 67¼c and standards 67½c, the latter being ⅝c under the August. Sales of 170,000 bu were made to go to store for delivery, making 320,000 bu in the last two days.

The most effective buying was by shorts and profit taking against bids, but the market had a heavy undertone throughout the day. Export demand was slow, with sales of 50,000 bu, and a like quantity was sold for domestic shipment. Receipts were 396 cars. For the week arrivals were 5,020,000 bu and shipments 1,275,000 bu. Last year receipts were 2,326,000 bu and shipments 1,353,000 bu. Clearances for the day were 382,000 bu.

Wheat Movement Sets Record.

All records for a week's movement of wheat have been broken, the total primary run aggregating 20,597,000 bu, comparing with 19,854,000 bu for the week ending Nov. 13, 1915, which was the largest heretofore and 5,920,000 bu last year. At present it appears as though the bulk of the grain was coming from east of the Missouri river, as west of there cars are getting short. There is no incentive for farmers to hold their grain back, and it is being rushed forward, much to the satisfaction of all concerned, as it is imperative that an immense stock be accumulated before cold weather comes. Local receipts were 715 cars, and for the week 7,703,000 bu, the latter comparing with 828,000 bu last year. Shipments were 2,904,000 bu, against 410,000 bu last year.

Rye and Barley Lower.

Demand for rye was not as keen as recently, and prices declined 1@2c. No. 2 sold at $1.56@1.57. Receipts 20 cars. Milwaukee was unchanged and Minneapolis 1c lower. The northwest had 77 cars.

Barley sold rather slowly, as receipts were larger, and outside markets easier. Feed and milling quoted at 90c@$1.02. Receipts 44 cars. Milwaukee 1@2c lower, and Minneapolis 2@3c lower. The northwest had 23 cars.

Flax seed at Duluth closed 1c higher to ½c lower; September, $4.37; October, $4.31. Winnipeg unchanged. October, $4.10. The three leading markets had 1 car.

Timothy seed unchanged. October, $10.65 asked, and October $9.75 bid. Toledo unchanged; September, $4.85; October and December, $4.77½; March and April, $4.90 per bu of 45 lbs. Clover seed, no market. Toledo, 40c lower; October, $16.60; December, $16.50 per bu of 60 lbs.

Light Pressure on Provisions.

Provisions had better support and selling pressure was lighter. Prices advanced and closed at almost the best, with pork up 40c, lard 15c, and short ribs, 12½c for the day. Traders credited the buying to packing interests, who took more ribs than any other article. There was selling of September and buying of October lard at the same price by the Armour interest.

Little was heard of the cash trade. Corn was lower and hogs higher. The week's movement of lard and meats showed a decrease from the previous week and meats were under last year's, while lard showed a small increase. Packing in Chicago since March 1 aggregates 3,126,000 hogs, against 2,687,000 last year. Receipts of hogs in the west for the week were over last year's. Prices follow:

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

Latest reports from Russia make a poor showing regarding supplies of wheat and food generally. Production the last two years has been reduced 50 per cent. In 1914 when the war started there was a surplus of wheat, but with the increase in production owing to 12,000,000 soldiers being put into the field it was rapidly consumed. In 1915 consumption increased and production decreased, so that in 1916 and since there has been an acute shortage. Machinery has broken down which it has been impossible to repair. This, with a shortage of workers, has greatly reduced production at the most urgent time, so that Germany has been unable to get supplies from Russia.

An investigation into Russia's conditions and requirements by men who went there within the last year for that purpose shows that Russia's greatest need is farm machinery. Last year its production was 20 per cent of normal. Siberia is regarded as the agricultural country of the greatest possibilities for the future. Richard Martens, a Russian authority, says that with 5,000 United States engineers, 20,000 machines, and 1,000 tractors production of foodstuffs can be increased from 47,000,000 tons, the present rate, to 150,000,000 tons.

A few of the local bulls on corn who had not previously let go went out of their holdings yesterday and several turned to the bear side. One of them remarked that it looked as though corn futures were headed for $1.50. Rains over the southwest and the most favorable war news were used as the depressing factor. There is a general feeling in the trade that the highest prices for corn have been seen for some time. Traders on both corn and oats, however, were so excessively bearish that it led some to take profits on the late break, on the belief that there was too much company on the bear side and that the markets had been oversold. These traders bought offers on both grains, but generally bids were preferred.

A great deal of selling of corn has been on the last two days on the old time theory that Aug. 10 was the day to sell. Some local traders who frequently operate on the calendar conditions put out their short lines on Friday, feeling sure of their position. This resulted in an increase in the short interest.

A review of the grain situation in Chicago develops the fact that there is apparently more than one side to the question of making moisture tests on corn and wheat in connection with the inspection and grading of these two grains. As a close student of the situation sees it. An examination of the rules and regulations of the secretary of agriculture under which the inspectors of the Illinois state grain inspection department are working shows that the making of moisture tests on all samples of wheat which they inspect and grade is not required. It is required, however, that the true grade of the grain be determined. The inspector is therefore permitted to exercise his judgment as to whether or not a moisture test or any other test is necessary in order to place the true grade upon the grain. Unprecedented receipts of grain, together with the shortage of labor, combine to keep the railroad yards and unloading equipment taxed to the utmost. The yard congestion necessitating oftentimes long search for stray cars consumes vastly more time than if the grain were yarded on adjacent tracks as it is under normal conditions.

A message to the Illinois Telegraph News company from the department of agriculture said that the reports of field agents received after Aug. 1 were not taken into consideration in making up the crop report on corn which was given to the trade Aug. 9.

P. S. Goodman, with Clement, Curtis & Co., calls attention to the wide difference in the condition of corn in Kansas and Missouri between his returns and those of the department of agriculture. Returns on which the two reports were compiled were mailed within a week apart. On this account, weather having been dry, Goodman lowered the condition in Kansas to 78, or 3 points under what his returns actually showed, while the government made it 60. In Missouri he lowered the condition to 80, or 2 points under the actual figure, and the government showed 72. The fact that the Clement-Curtis, the Snow-Bartlett-Frazier, and the government reports have been averaging only a few points difference lends some color to the general belief of the trade that part of the damage which occurred after Aug. 1 was included in the government report.

Primary receipts of wheat since July 1 aggregate 66,585,000 bu, compared with 18,398,000 bu last year. Chicago received 16,795,000 bu, against 1,918,000 bu last year; Kansas City 20,302,000 bu, compared with 5,981,000 bu last year; St. Louis 13,048,000 bu, against 3,956,000 bu last year, and Omaha 4,778,000 bu, against 281,000 bu last year.

Corn receipts at primary markets since Nov. 1, 1917, aggregate 240,025,000 bu, compared with 203,000 bu the previous season. Chicago has received 75,718,000 bu, an increase of over 5,000,000 bu compared with last year. Omaha is second on the list with 39,309,000 bu, an increase of nearly 15,000,000 bu over last year.

Oats have been marketed more freely than last year. Since Aug. 1 primary receipts aggregate 14,939,000 bu, compared with 8,848,000 bu last year. Chicago has received over 50 per cent of the total at all markets and more than double last year's.

George M. Le Count, the crop expert who is managing Finley-Barrell's farm on the Illinois river, in a message to Block, Maloney & Co. from Havana, Ill., says: "Corn on heavy land stood drouth and heat fairly well. But corn on light and sandy land is damaged. However, I think Illinois will raise a big crop which will mature early."

To further facilitate the handling of car lots of wheat the "to arrive" grain committee has asked that all the sheets covering memorandums of cars grading under straight No. 1 and No. 2 contain information regarding only a single car. Strict attention to this request will be appreciated by the committee and will help them in their efforts to secure prompt unloading.

With a crop of 232,000,000 bu of barley selling at 90c to $1.00, or less than 2c per lb, while oats are selling at 2 1-5c per lb, a trader who is bearish says No. 3 rye is selling at $1.50, soft wheat flour is offered at $9.30, and dull at that, while it should bring $10.15 to equal government basis on wheat. He regards corn and oats as too high. He expects that competition which corn and oats will meet from other food products will eventually bring a lower level of values. This shows how the speculative mind has changed of late.

A wire from Miami, Okla., to Bridge & Leonard said: "Heavy rains at Afton, Sapulpa, Claremore, Tulsa, Miami, north to Fort Scott probably two inches of rain. Grass black for ten days at least."

CASH GRAIN NEWS

Cash winter wheat in the leading markets sold practically at the basic price for all grades, with the food administration taking the grain. Terminal conditions at Chicago show great improvement. One elevator asked for 250 cars to unload and was given 300 cars. Other elevators also gave notice of their ability to unload more grain. Receipts continue liberal. The five leading markets had 2,032 cars, against 2,101 cars a week ago and 549 cars last year.

Demand for cash corn here was fair, with shipping sales of 30,000 bu. Sample values were firm. At St. Louis offerings were limited and demand active and mixed and yellow advanced 9@15c, while white was unchanged. Kansas City was unchanged to 1c higher, Peoria unchanged to 5c higher, and Milwaukee unchanged. The five leading markets had 199 cars, against 269 cars a week ago and 251 cars last year.

Cash oats closed weak and 1½@1¾c lower, with No. 3 white at Chicago 67¼c and standards 67½c. St. Louis was unchanged to ½c lower, Kansas City unchanged, Peoria ⅝c lower, and Milwaukee 1c lower. Domestic shipping sales here were 50,000 bu, and a like quantity was sold to the seaboard. Five leading markets had 546 cars, against 445 cars a week ago and 426 cars last year. HAY AND STRAW

With nine cars of timothy hay received at Chicago yesterday a good demand existed and also at full prices. Loadings and shipments of hay from the interior show an increase, although they are not regarded as sufficient to be an important market factor, as there are many holes to fill up. New timothy sells as well as old. There were only three cars of prairie hay in, which came from Illinois, with no western offerings. No. 1 timothy was $29.00@33.00; standard timothy, $27.00@29.00; No. 1 light clover mixed, $27.00@29.00; western prairie, $28.00@30.00 for choice; Iowa and northwestern, $26.00@27.00; rye straw, $9.00@10.00; wheat and oat straw, $8.00@9.00 per ton.

AVERAGE PRICE OF HOGS FOR AUGUST SOARS OVER 1917

Steers Are Way Above the Same Week a Year Ago.

Hogs sold yesterday at $20.05, equaling the record of the preceding two days, but it was the first time that shippers ever paid the price. More offerings sold at $20 than ever before and the average price of $19.40 was 10c above the previous record of last August.

Although the week's average price of steers at $15.60 proved the lowest since June and 70c under the record of the previous week, it figured $3.10 higher than the same week a year ago and $2.10 higher than the highest week ever known previous to 1918.

Spread in hog values narrowed up considerably the last week, but in the cattle division the range of prices was the widest of the year, due to the abundance of grassy stock and scarcity of prime animals.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 19,000 cattle, 35,000 hogs, and 20,000 sheep, against 14,513 cattle, 25,732 hogs, and 11,545 sheep corresponding Monday a year ago. Next week's estimated receipts, 60,000 cattle, 115,000 hogs, and 80,000 sheep.

Average of Hogs $19.40.

The average price of hogs at Chicago was $19.40, the highest on record, against $19.25 Friday, $19.00 a week ago, $16.70 a year ago, $10.23 two years ago, and $6.82 three years ago.

The estimated average weight of hogs last week was 242 lbs, against 242 lbs previous week and 232 lbs a year ago.

Eleven markets received 430,000 hogs last week, against 404,000 previous week and 388,000 a year ago. Total for year to date, 19,495,000, against 17,400,000 a year ago.

CATTLE VALUES SLUMP.

Most steers and she stock closed 50c to $1.00 lower than a week ago. A few prime lots held steady, steers making a record of $18.80 and Montana rangers reaching $17.70. Bulls were steady to strong with calves steady, vealers closing at $17.25. Best feeders steady to strong and plain kinds weaker.

HOGS AT HIGH POINT.

Hogs averaged 10@15c higher and finished strong. Prices were 30@40c higher than a week ago. Top was $20.05, with many at $20.00. Pigs were steady and showed little change from a week ago, bulk going at $18.00@18.50. Eleven markets had 40,000, or 1,000 more than a week ago and 11,000 more than a year ago.

PRODUCE TRADE

Business in fruits Saturday was fair. Supplies were ample for all requirements and little change was made in prices. Melons of all kinds sold readily, with supplies of gems and cantaloupes liberal, but of watermelons rather light, which made a firm market for the latter.

Potatoes sold more readily, with a firm market for sack stock. Receipts were 35 cars, with 89 cars on track.

No changes were made in prices of butter or eggs, although the butter markets were firmer and in good condition here and in the east. Heavy hens declined 1c. Receipts for the week were 17 cars and 4,300 coops of all poultry, compared with 13 cars and 4,035 coops the previous week.

FINANCIAL NOTES

War risk rates are now quoted at a fractional reduction for neutral nations, the rate from these countries to the United States being put at 3 per cent instead of 4 per cent for unarmed vessels, while that for armed craft remains at 2¼ per cent. From Greece via Gibraltar rates are firmer due to the renewed submarine operations in that vicinity.

After taking a trip over the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad between Cincinnati and Hot Springs, W. Va., and noticing that passenger coaches in several trains were filled with travelers without seats, Director General McAdoo ordered additional cars attached to the trains or second sections operated. Investigations are being conducted by the railroad administration looking to relieving crowded conditions on many other passenger trains in the east and middle west.

Edward J. Prescott, for eight years secretary of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust company in charge of their trust department, has resigned his position there to become identified with the investment house of Halsey, Stuart & Co. Mr. Prescott will represent Halsey, Stuart & Co. in the territory covered by Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The appointment of C. O. Bradshaw, general superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway, as terminal manager for all roads at Milwaukee is announced by R. H. Aishton, regional director. The terminal manager will have charge of all terminal operations at Milwaukee, reporting to the regional director.

Next Thursday the final installment on subscriptions to the third Liberty loan will become due, and the federal reserve bank has sent out a letter to the member banks reminding them of the obligation. Payment may be made by cash or bank draft or by advice of credit on the books of banks or trust companies who have qualified as depositors.

Federal Manager C. G. Burnham of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and the Omaha and Kansas City railroads makes the following appointments, effective Aug. 9:

E. B. Bracken, general manager; P. S. Eustis, passenger traffic manager; G. H. Crosby, freight traffic manager, and R. B. Scott, general solicitor.

The appointments are approved by Regional Director Hale Holden of the Central Western division.

Copper dealers have found the market disturbed by misinformed reports that the price fixing committee had amended its ruling making the price of the metal 26c. There were reports that the committee had changed its order and fixed a price of 26½c to help the high cost producers, but no such order was entered.

The Dale-Brewster Machinery company, Inc., of New York has taken over all the assets and business of the Illinois company of similar name, which has been dissolved, and will continue the business.

INSURANCE NEWS IN ALL BRANCHES EAST AND WEST

Shortage of Fuel Will Cause New Fire Hazards.

BY THOMAS R. WEDDELL.

Fire insurance men are giving careful attention to the new hazards which will be presented by the coal situation this winter. Householders throughout the west who have used hard coal are being notified that at best they can be supplied with only one-third of the amount they have had heretofore, and must make up the deficiency with soft coal.

This will create serious fire hazards. The most important will be the storage in dwelling and apartment house basements of large quantities of soft coal, much of it of an inferior quality, subject to the spontaneous combustion hazard. In addition the heating appliances are not adapted to the use of soft coal. The large amount of soot generated is apt to clog the smoke pipes and chimneys and cause forcing of the furnaces, while the fumes and gases from soft coal will have a deteriorating effect upon the mortar in chimneys and thus lead to defective flue fires.

FEARS WAR CONDITIONS.

Sidney A. Foster, secretary of the Royal Union Mutual Life, has sent a circular letter to all companies in the American Life convention, discussing war conditions and the possibility of increased taxes. He says that in view of war mortality should hostilities continue next year, and the necessity for large investments in Liberty bonds, he believes that every life insurance company should pass its allotment of dividends to policyholders for 1919. Other company managers say that while there may be some reduction of premium returns, there is no likelihood of a wholesale suspension.

MAY POSTPONE MEETING.

The National Association of Insurance Agents, which had fixed its annual meeting at Cleveland for Oct. 9 to 11, is considering a change to the third week in September, in order to avoid conflict with the Liberty loan campaign. This will culminate on the week originally set for the convention, when most of the convention delegates would be busy on this work.

CONCRETE SHIP HAZARDS.

Marine underwriters are moving cautiously in accepting liability on the concrete ships which are being constructed in large numbers by the Emergency Fleet corporation. While these ships have stood the test very well so far, the marine insurance problem is complicated by the difficulty of securing repairs in foreign ports and in many domestic ports until the concrete ship business has been very greatly developed.

INSURANCE NOTES.

It is understood that Lawrence Priddy, president of the National Association of Life Underwriters, will not be a candidate for reelection at the annual meeting in September. John 'L. Shuff, Cincinnati manager of the Union Central Life, is being urged as a candidate, as is also Wilson Williams of New Orleans, general agent of the New England Mutual.

P. A. Berger, receiver for the insurance exchange of the National Retail Dry Goods association, which made a disastrous failure last year, has given notice that on Aug. 19 he will ask the court for an order eliminating all accounting among the members of the insurance exchange, based on claims for the unused portion of the premium deposits.

The double platoon system will go into effect in the San Francisco fire department Aug. 15. It is feared that the fire protection of the city will be impaired, as the total number of men is not increased and a smaller number of men will be on duty at any one time.

Mrs. M. C. St. John, who has been in the government service at Washington, is now office secretary of the Fire Insurance club of Chicago, succeeding Mrs. Harriet Brown, who has gone with the uniform forms committee.

The city authorities of Davenport, Ia., have been notified that unless the fire department is brought up to standard strength the classification of the city will have to be changed.

Carroll B. Robertson, an inspector for the Western Actuarial bureau, and Robert Bowles of its sprinkler leakage department, leave the bureau this month to enter the service.

COTTON REACHES NEW HIGH MARKS; SOARS $6.00 A BALE

New York, Aug. 10.—Cotton prices went to new high records for the season in the market here today, with a further advance of from $5.00 to $6.20 a bale. News of further allied victories in France, continued dry weather in Texas, and reports of higher spot markets in the southwest inspired the buying movement.

Comment was more or less general on the floor that a continuation of the big allied drives might bring peace into sight before the end of another season, and the situation in this respect evidently served to stimulate buying on the continued drought in the southwest, higher Texas spot markets as reported late yesterday, and reports of a better export business in cotton goods.

There was some selling, believed to be for Japanese account, but southern selling was not much in evidence and the market showed a generally strong tone. Futures:

STEEL TONNAGE SHOWS FALLING OFF FOR MONTH

The monthly statement of the United States Steel corporation of the unfilled orders on its books shows business of 8,883,801 tons on July 31, a decrease of 35,065 tons from the showing made as of June 29. This is the smallest change in tonnage reported in many months.

Greater stability in tonnage reports is expected in the future for the reason that practically all of the long term contracts for railroad and industrial steel have been filled or canceled and the bulk of business other than government will be allotted rather than being delivered on contract.

The unfilled orders at the end of each month for the last twelve months were as follows:

PLANS TO GIVE RELIEF TO NEEDY UTILITY FIRMS

Series of Financing Corporations One Scheme That Is Favored.

A series of conferences, attended by bankers and the managing directors of many large public utility properties, will consider the problem of providing financial relief to needy utility companies which are unable to borrow from their banks, cannot sell securities on a sane basis in the market, and are denied relief by the War Finance corporation.

One of the schemes generally favored is the formation of a series of financing corporations, one in each center, where money in any large amount is to be provided, the corporation formed to loan needed funds to the utility and in turn rediscount with the War Finance corporation the notes of the borrowing utility.

Indication of Growth.

An indication of the important growth which has taken place in the sale of household electric appliances by public utility companies is supplied by figures showing that the various subsidiaries of the Cities Service company in the first six months of 1918 totaled $1,073,696 in such sales, compared with a total of $769,835 for the first six months of 1917.

In 1914 these subsidiaries sold 100,110 of appliances, in 1915 $694,361 of appliances were sold, in 1916 sales amounted to $1,224,390, and in 1917 sales were $1,870,000. Based on the first six months of the current year, appliance sales by the Cities Service company subsidiaries in 1918 will exceed $2,500,000.

As a result of an injunction restraining the Brooklyn Borough Gas company from charging $1.25 per 1,000 feet of gas, or any other amount in excess of the 95 cent rate, the company has announced that the matter would be tried out in court and the bearing of the recent decision of the Court of Appeals restricting the rate making power of the commission, so far as it relates to the Borough company, will be determined.

Byllesby Properties.

Gross and net earnings of combined Byllesby properties for the month of July, 1918, and for the year ended July 31, 1918, compared with the corresponding previous periods, are as follows:

	1918.	1917.
July—
Gross earnings	$ 1,712,473	[illegible]
Net earnings	676,769	[illegible]
Year ended July 31—
Gross earnings	21,036,672	[illegible]
Net earnings	8,585,959	[illegible]

All Byllesby electric properties reporting for the week ended Aug. 1 show the following new business gains [net]: 302 customers with 367 kilowatts of lighting and 98 horse power in motors. New business contracted for but not yet connected includes 1,118 customers with 417 kilowatts of lighting and 702 horse power in motors. Electric energy output shows a gain of 13.5 per cent over the corresponding week a year ago.

A decision was handed down by the public utility commission of New Jersey giving permission to the Public Service Railroad company of Trenton to put into effect increased rates on the fast electric line over the company's private right of way in the main and partly over local street railway lines. The new rate is 2½ cents per mile, with minimum fare of 10 cents.

ADOPTS "SERVICE AT COST" SYSTEM.

The Northampton Street Railway company has notified the Massachusetts public service commission that it will adopt the "service at cost" system and asks the commission to set the amounts of reserve and of improvement funds. Upon adoption of the new arrangement the company will insist on a fare system of nine units, the initial one to be the middle unit. If the income derived is greater than needed, a smaller unit of fare will be ordered, and vice versa.

RESERVE REPORT SHOWS EASIER MONEY TENDENCY

Banks Curtail Their Borrowings During the Week.

A slightly easier tendency in the money market is reflected in the statement of the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago. Banks curtailed their borrowings during the week, rediscounts showing a decrease of $4,000,000. The reserve bank went into the open market to buy paper, increasing its portfolio of bills purchased by $1,200,000. The bank's account in the gold settlement was reduced by $10,000,000 by the transfer of government credit, but its reserves as a whole showed considerable improvement. Gold deposited with the federal reserve agent increased $27,000,000. Government deposits were nearly doubled. The figures compare:

TALK OF THE STREET

Marine preferred has been called the stock of eternal hope. Investors and speculators alike have hoped for it with boundless faith three days a week and cursed it the other four for two years. The fickle issue has been abandoned in discredit recently, but when it crossed par again yesterday the gossip mills resumed business. A program of directors' meetings should begin shortly.

Another issue that has been followed with more confidence than profit recently is Baldwin. Like Reading's hidden assets, Baldwin's mysterious surplus inspires buying which assets and prospects do not encourage. A new pool, or one of the several old ones, is operating in Baldwin and many accounts are being shifted to include this equipment.

The motor issues, with the exception of General Motors, which lost five points with little liquidation, were easily absorbed in early trading and bid for when offerings were withdrawn. Stockholders appear to be confident in the face of the warning of the war industries board that the pleasure car business may be doomed. It is estimated that the more drastic the curtailment the more urgent the demand for cars after the war. In the meanwhile share owners are confident their companies can earn a fair return working for the government.

In explanation of the material advance in franc checks that was continued dealers suggested that it could be traced to some extent to the demands of the men in the American expeditionary forces leaving the United States in increasing numbers and to heavy buying by the Young Men's Christian association in connection with their foreign service. Franc checks advanced yesterday from 569 to 568. A week ago they were 571⅛.

Cash holdings of the Midvale Steel company are in excess of $20,000,000. Midvale has a working capital of close to $80,000,000, against its capitalization of $100,000,000, and does not owe a dollar. Earnings are establishing new high records and by the close of the current year it is expected the Cambria Steel will have paid for itself out of earnings.

If the arrearage on Allis-Chalmers preferred stock is to be liquidated at the current rate it will take another year and a half, but in view of the steady increase in earnings during the last three years the remaining $5.60 could easily be liquidated this year. Were this actually done the book value of the common stock at the end of the current year would be in excess of $50 a share.

PROTECTION FOR WAR INDUSTRY RISKS PROVIDED

New York, Aug. 9.—[Special.]—The committee on increased facilities for large risks appointed a subcommittee immediately to prepare a plan of operation to be submitted to all companies, after which formal organization will be effected. The plan will meet its only criticism of the government regarding the insufficiency of the present cover obtainable on war industry risks. It will provide for ample protection for food, munition, and equipment risk, both factories and warehouses.

The Missouri department has approved the rates for automobile "manufacturers' output policies," and the rates, rules, and forms recently adopted by the Western Automobile Underwriters' conference will be put into effect immediately in Missouri.

Joseph H. Woodward, actuary of the state industrial commission, has been appointed associate actuary of the Guardian Life Insurance company of New York.

Receivers for Ætna Stop Monthly Statements

New York, Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Receivers of the Ætna Explosives company have decided to discontinue the publication of monthly earnings, and as a consequence the June earnings, due at this time, will not be given out. It is not known whether future earnings statements will be quarterly or semi-annually, but it is understood that the next statement will be in the form of a report to the United States District court covering the six months to June 30.

NO SHORTAGE OF SULPHUR.

William G. Woolfolk, sulphur expert of the war industries board, denies there is any occasion for alarm over the reported small supply of sulphur in this country for use of the army and navy or the many other purposes for which it is employed.

GOTHAM STOCKS GO UP AS BOCHE STOCK GOES DOWN

Market Vigorous Despite Only Two Hours of Trading.

[New York Times Financial Review.]

New York, Aug. 10.—[Special.]—Stimulated in spite of itself by the arrival of still more encouraging reports of the crumbling of the German army under Von Hutier, today's stock market displayed unusual vigor for a midsummer two hour session, and nearly all of the industrial issues made further advances, though they were generally moderate.

The outstanding feature was the buying of United States Steel common, which carried that issue up to 112⅝ at the close, an advance of 1½ points for the day and of nearly 4½ for the week.

Most of the rails made fractional gains, with Lackawanna advancing 2 points. There was a good demand for government bonds, with the tax exempt 3½s again making 100.02.

Motor Shares Irregular.

The unlooked for warning from the war industries board that manufacturers of pleasure cars should get themselves in position to turn out war materials exclusively by the end of the year may have been responsible for a drop of 5 points in the shares of the General Motors company, but the strength of other motor issues indicated that traders believed earnings would not suffer by the enforced change.

It has been known to the manufacturers for some months that they would be unable to get anything like their normal supplies of steel.

White Motors Advances.

Chandler sold off 1 point, though that company has already made considerable progress in the direction recommended by the government authorities, while White, which is chiefly engaged in making trucks for which steel will presumably be alloted, gained 1½. Maxwell was unchanged and Studebaker made a fractional advance.

As the war goes on there must be a further curtailment of industries which cannot properly claim a place as essential.

—As To Acceptances
A Prominent Banker Says:

The Trade Acceptance and the Open Account it closes are the same—except as to form—each simply represents the same merchandise sold on credit instead of for cash.

"ADVANTAGES OF THE TRADE ACCEPTANCE. They are used to put Book-Credits into negotiable form, and constitute a system by which Book-Credits may promptly be converted into cash.

The use of the Trade Acceptance also removes from Merchants and Manufacturers the necessity of acting as bankers for their customers by way of open accounts.

Those houses which have been in the habit of putting out their own promissory notes in order to raise funds with which to take advantage of cash discounts, are now in a position to use the Trade Acceptance which they obtain from their own customers, discounting such Acceptances with the bank."

If it is well to realize cash for Acceptances, why not also for Accounts—each represents the sale of the same merchandise? We arrange your Accounts into Bankable form, for our purchase—just as Acceptances are in Bankable form for purchase by banks.

By selling us Accounts, without waiting for them to become Acceptances, if ever, you get your money sooner and with certainty. The small difference in cost is necessary because of the intangible nature of Accounts and should be more than offset by added profits from the use of quicker money.

from Capri in Sunny Italy came this appealing note

SHE had lived in various cities on the Continent, but London was the place she loved best of all. It was during one of her sojourns here—something like ten years ago—that she first tried CREME ELCAYA. Never since has she used any other cream. Never since has she had to worry about her complexion.

Of late, she has found it more and more difficult to secure this ideal, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream. And she isn't willing to get along without it. It means more to her than a cream that keeps her skin soft and pleasing in texture. She feels that it imparts a sense of elegance to her person—that subtle nicety that often proves more charming than beauty itself.

"Villa Farnesina, Capri, Italy.

Dear Sirs: Please tell me what I am going to do when I can no longer secure Creme Elcaya? It has not only doubled in price but I have had great difficulty in finding any here in Naples. Could you send it to me direct? I have used it for many years, and I shall not know how to do without it.

Yours faithfully, S—— J——."

A woman can be as sweet and dainty as she wents to be. Taking care to use CREME ELCAYA every time before applying your face powder will repay you many times in terms of personal loveliness. You would understand this better than I could tell you could you see some of the many frank letters written me by women in all parts of the world.

This special formula would not be followed unfailingly by so many women of beauty were it not an aid to keeping them beautiful. Countless numbers would not have used it—and no other—for ten to fifteen years had it not helped them to have that irresistible attribute of lovely women—an exquisite skin. Go now and get your mirror and look closely at your skin. Is it fine-grained, soft and fresh like a girl's? Does it bring you a glow of pleasure just to look at it? If so, Creme Elcaya will help you to keep it beautiful. If not,

Begin today to follow this formula—

A little Creme Elcaya rubbed gently into the skin; then, if you need color, a very little good Rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Face Powder over all.

Before you'd believe it possible, your skin will be so good to look at that you will go often to your mirror. And the joy of knowing that you give pleasure to all who see you will add new joy to life.

A trial package including Creme Elcaya and Elcaya Complexion Powder may be had by sending ten cents in a letter marked Department "K" to the address below. Use Elcaya Rouge or your own, as you please.

"Not a trace of perspiration stain or odor on it!"

Wear a silk or serge dress for weeks and weeks and still not have the slightest perspiration stain on it! Or a trace of perspiration odor. Not only can you do this easily, but you need wear no protection in your dress either!

For excessive perspiration under the arms, on the hands, feet or forehead is unnatural, unhealthful—and avoidable. Odorono, a toilet water formulated by a physician, keeps the underarms absolutely clean and fresh—your feet cool and comfortable. It is easily and quickly used, and one application will banish all perspiration trouble for at least three days.

At all toilet counters in the United States and Canada, 60c and $1.00. Trial size, 30c. By mail, postpaid, if your dealer hasn't it. Address The Odorono Co., 1108 Blair Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Write for our booklet, "The Appealing Charm of Daintiness"—to know more about perspiration and how to relieve it. Suggest to the men in your family that they write for "The Assurance of Perfect Grooming."

Dr. Allyn endorses Odorono

"We do not believe that any harm can come from stopping the excretion of perspiration in limited areas, such as under the arms, feet, forehead, etc.

"Experimental and practical tests show that Odorono is harmless, economical and effective when employed as directed, and will injure neither the skin nor the health."

HOW REIMS CATHEDRAL LOOKS TODAY—This is the latest photograph to come from the city of Reims, which the allies are holding against the attack of the Germans. The photograph reveals the state of the homes near the cathedral and the condition of the cathedral itself, which has been reduced almost to ruins by the German bombardment.

Tint your yellowed blouse a beautiful pink, blue or lavender.

That hopelessly faded georgette blouse—the crepe de chine one, white once but now a horrid yellow . . . . Your silk underwear that has faded so badly—make them all lovely and attractive again!

COME! Bring out your faded, yellowed treasures! You can restore their original beauty. In just a few minutes, you can tint them any fashionable shade you want. With no trouble at all you can transform them so they make you look just a bit smarter than most people—a bit more successful.

Remember that becoming georgette blouse—the one you almost wept over when it began to turn yellow and look passe? You can now make it a delicate flesh color, an exquisite lavender, green, blue, ecru, yellow—whichever one of the fashionable shades you prefer! You can Tintex it!

Tintex is not a dye, but a brand new tint for silk, georgette, crepe de chine, washable satin, batiste—wool even! It won't injure the most perishable fabrics that launder. What is more, Tintex does not leave streaks or blotches; it always produces a clear, true shade and an even tone throughout.

So easy to use—it's fun

After washing the garment, you sift about a teaspoonful of Tintex into the last rinsing water. Then you dip the wet garment in and work it up and down, to get every part well tinted. Wring as dry as possible—roll in a towel—iron while damp. Your old garment emerges transformed—like new—beautifully tinted!

Tintex is sold in drug and department stores throughout your city—25c a box, 30c in Canada. If your store does not have the color you want, we shall be glad to send it direct.

So easy to use—it's fun. Use Tintex just like bluing—no boiling—no bother.

No matter how forlorn your poor, discolored blouse looks, you can make it fresh, charming, new!

Let us send you enough to tint a blouse or camisole. Send 6c for sample package of Tintex (flesh pink). Enough to tint a blouse and collar, or a silk combination and camisole. Mail the coupon NOW. Address Tintex Company, Inc., Dept. 84, 299 Madison Ave., New York.

Queen Helena of Italy

BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

EYES that are deep as forest pools, velvety black, lit by sudden red lights as when burning brands fall sizzling into calm waters; a forehead framed in a wealth of dark, curling hair; beautiful and delicate features; a smile that lures little dimples from hiding on either side the firm, full lipped mouth; a tall figure, slight, stately, and distantly shy—Queen Helena of Italy, beloved by her people, her children, and the king.

From the mountain freedom of Montenegro the Prince of Naples, now Victor Emmanuel III, brought his bride. Simple and pure were her tastes as the fastnesses from which she came. All her life the Princess Helena had passed in Montenegro except for the few years she studied in the convent for girls of gentle birth at Petrograd. Then, at home again, she divided her time between painting in water-color, in which she excels, and hunting. The queen is a splendid shot, but after her marriage she abhorred killing and her only targets were clay pigeons and other inanimate marks.

She first came to Italy in 1895, when her father, Prince Nicholas, brought her to Venice for a gala occasion. There she met the crown prince, who a year later became her husband.

For six years after their marriage no children came. But little Princess Yolanda, to the great joy of all Italy, was born the year after her father was crowned king. Now there are five royal children, Princess Yolanda, Princess Mafalda, Prince Umberto, Princess Giovanna and Princess Maria. Queen Helena and King Victor Emmanuel are devoted parents. Their greatest happiness is found in each other and their children. But their next joy is the people, and they are tireless in their deeds of charity and thoughtfulness. Italy has prospered under their wise rule.

This is the first portrait of the queen to reach the United States showing her in her costume as a Red Cross nurse. She has endeared herself to her people by her work in the hospitals among the wounded and dying soldiers, and is popularly known as the most noble patroness of the Red Cross. The sorrows of war have made in her heart the men of Italy as members of her own beloved family.

NOTHING in the world pleased the Dunce more than to take a hook and line, sneak off to some quiet place along the stream which ran near the Teenie Weenie camp, and fish. Zip, the Teenie Weenie wild man, loved to fish almost as much as the Dunce, and the two little fellows never lost a single opportunity to hook a minnow.

"Where's the Dunce?" asked the General one day as the little people sat down to their noonday meal.

"I think the Dunce and Zip have gone fishing," answered the Cook as he set a big hickory nut baking dish on the table filled with escalloped carrot.

"Well, if they don't show up before lunch is over they will have to wait until supper before they get anything to eat," said the General.

"They have their lunch with them, General," said the Cook. "Both of them worked so well this morning helping me about the kitchen I thought you wouldn't mind if I fixed them up a bite to eat. I gave them half a bean and four buttered grains of boiled rice."

"That's all right, Cook," smiled the General. "When a man does his work he is entitled to all the fun he can have."

"Helup! Helup!" screamed a voice; and jumping up from the table the startled Teenie Weenies ran out of the dining tent where they saw Zip galloping towards them with eyes as big as shoe buttons.

"Hurry much quick! Big flish! Dunce him hug! Much water! Quick hurry much!" shouted the excited Teenie Weenie.

Without another word Zip turned and dashed off down the path beside the creek, followed by the rest of the Teenie Weenies.

Presently the little people came in sight of the stream, and there, beside a big stick which extended out into the water, they saw a most unusual sight.

With both arms tightly clasped about the body of a huge minnow the Dunce was thrashing around in the water and yelling like a wild Indian.

Several of the Teenie Weenies jumped into the water and after a hard fight they landed the minnow on the bank.

"What happened? Tell us all about it," said the General after the exhausted Dunce had had time to rest a bit.

"Well, it was this way," began the Dunce, looking around at his admiring friends. "Zip and me had been sitting on this log here fishin' and suddenly something g-g-gave my pole an awful j-j-jerk and I saw that I had a b-b-big f-f-f-fish hooked. He kept pullin' so I was afraid he'd break my line and I didn't want to loose him, so I j-j-j-jumped in and grabbed him around the waist. Jimminie f-f-f-fish hooks, but he did thrash and wiggle and it was all I could do to hold him, so I yelled to Zip to run for help."

"Well, sir," said the General, holding out his hand, "I want to congratulate you, for you have proved that you are game to the core."

That night the Teenie Weenies sat down to a fine dinner of baked minnow and the Dunce was given the seat of honor.

The SHOWDOWN by Jack Lait

Myrtle's Suitor Comes for His Answer.

An event of unusual character was impending in the Crawford household. Mrs. Crawford was dusting where there was no dust, anxiously peeking over her shoulder at the clock each minute as she buzzed about. It rang 8 o'clock, and the old woman darted out of the "parlor" and out of sight, leaving the room in possession of her beauteous daughter, Myrtle, the model.

Myrtle was seated at the part payment piano practicing scales. But her heart wasn't in it—any one could hear that. She, too, was sneaking glances at the clock. Her left hand was missing sharps on two cylinders, and either her fingering or her gum chewing was out of tempo, for the two operations did not synchronize.

The cause of all this abnormal tension was due: Harry Clayton, the urbane restaurateur, owner of the Tintray cafeteria, had whispered to Myrtle in the luncheon hour that day that he would be at her home in the neighborhood of 8 o'clock for his answer. The thirty days were up—the thirty days' truce which Myrtle had proposed to Clayton when Clayton had proposed to her; thirty days in which they were to see each other for a few minutes each day, but during which no further prosecution of the romance should proceed through wooing or pleading.

The thirty days had gone. Myrtle had lunched on each business day in Clayton's, had smiled to him and received sugared smiles in return. In odd hours she had turned over in her mind the potentialities of the presentable, well dressed, and affable Clayton as a husband—had compared the probabilities therein against the certainties of singleness and its vicissitudes of meager resources but abundant liberties, hard work but easy responsibilities.

And tonight he was to call and she must make a choice. "Company" was rare in the modest establishment of the Crawfords; the occasional callers were either platonic guests or mendicants in love with whom the vivacious yet immobile Myrtle was quite at her poiseful ease. But the knight who was riding at this moment on the Crawford castle was not to be cavalierly dismissed or yawningly tolerated; he had standing, he had "class," he had rights in the premises given him by none less than Princess Myrt herself.

Moreover, she respected Clayton, had never taken an attitude of levity toward him, was beholden to him for the reverential and manly manner of his suit as well as the game sportsmanship he had revealed in standing by the severe rules of the thirty day armistice, and she was fond of him; there was no use equivocating. Myrtle the salamander, terror of the matrimonially hungry and destroyer of the pot hunters who went after game just for the sport of the kill, was softly inclined toward Clayton.

The bell rang!

Myrtle pulled up sharply from the keyboard, crossed the room, and opened the door beyond the tiny vestibule.

"Good evening," saluted Clayton, with mellow smile.

"Good evening," returned she, taking his hat.

She led him in and he dropped to a seat on the davenport at one end. Myrtle went back to the piano bench.

"Won't you sit here beside me?" he asked.

"Well—I don't know; better stay over here where we can see each other good, an' where we got a lot o' No Man's Land between us."

He looked worried.

"Th-that doesn't sound as favorable as—as I had hoped," he regretted.

"O, I wouldn't say that," said she, by way of a rejoinder that was unprejudicial and yet responsive—sort of a plea of nolo contendere. "Did you have any trouble findin' the house?"

"None. And please don't veer away from the main subject. We've wasted thirty good, sweet days; now, let's get right to the business on hand, the most momentous 'deal' of my lifetime."

"Gee—ain't you impestuous."

"I'm anxious. If you'd said no when I spoke to you a month ago I might have learned by now to be composed and resigned. But when you left the vital matter open for a specified period, giving me plenty of room for hope and plenty of time for sanguine contemplation, I got myself all worked up with sustained anticipation. I've given this interview a lot of advance thought, and figured out every likely approach, with the conclusion that the best thing to do would be to ask you point blank for your answer. Now, then—will you marry me?"

"Well, I'll say you make it awful hard for a girl to turn you down."

"Thanks. Is it a turndown?"

"I—I don't know. I'm out on a limb. I've given this a whole lot o' thinkin', too. An' the more I roll it over under my hair the less I know what to answer you."

"One word is enough."

"Sure. But that's just it—which word? It means everything in the human world to me whether I say yes or no. I've said both to myself a hundred times since we talked that day in the cafeteria, an' tried to dope out what'd follow in either case. An' I'm up a stump—there's so much to be desired on both sides."

"Then you want more time to make up your mind?"

"Well, I don't see what good that'd do, at that. If I don't know now, how'm I goin' to know a week from now or a month from now?

"Gen'rally speakin', I'm sure I ain't burnin' to get married. I got that clear. But, again, I'm mighty strong for you. I'm a queer sketch, I guess. I've alwus nursed an idee that I'd marry when it come to me like a storm that I'd met one man I couldn't live without.

"Maybe I'm wrong; maybe I overplayed the sensation in my own imagination. I know that ain't the way most girls get married. They meet a feller an' he ain't so awful to look at, an' he's got both arms an' his original couple o' legs, an' he ain't never done time or nothin' like that, an' they get to goin' out t'gether until one night he talks weddin' ring. The girl is got it all figgered out by then that workin' in a store or office is a tough grind an' leads to nowheres, an' she's prob'ly not gettin' along so good with her folks, an' she reasons it out that bein' a wife is a better game. So she says all right, an' they live unhappily ever after.

"But not here. They say—a lot o' men do—that I'm the female fish an' all that. It is true I haven't never spooned or mooned aroun' to speak about. But when it comes to talkin' matrimony I got some very s'prisin' notions on the subjec'. Marridge an' monkey business never string together in my book at all.

"Now, you're the firs' man I ever encouraged in that regard, an' I may say without seemin' to brag, I think, that I been pretty proposed to, as such things go. The rest I give the quick toss, becus I couldn' for one minute associate them with that hysterical idee o' love, honor, an' obey that I been keepin' warm in my breast ever since I been old enough to think o' such things any.

"That's why I can't come through like a good sport an' either give you the quick go-by t'night or fall on your chest an' sob out my promises o' devotion till death do us tear asunder.

"I like you—I like you a whole lot. But whether or not I love you—that's where I'm stuck.

"Most girls o' my age, anyway girls what've had a reas'nable amount o' chances to run with men, have been in an' out o' love a dozen times. They're vet'rans by now. They don't have to ponder an' guess about whether or not they're hit in the vital location. They're experts an' they know every symptom, every angle. I'm a terrible boob at love, Mr. Clayton. I know so little about it I don't know even when it is an' when it ain't. I know that, before you was sweet an' decent enough to put the proposition up to me that you did, I hadn't never feasted on any o' that ambrosia à la mode what the poets rave over an' the song writers discuss with an ax.

"But this is the nearest thing I've ever known to what I fancy the reg'lar article might be, an' yet I can't convince myself as to whether I'm over the bound'ry, which would be wonderful, or just this side, which, in case we should go any further, would be fatal.

"I've tried to peg it for myself. I've tried to remember what other girls do when they're dead in love. You see, I wanna play safe, both for you an' for Myrtle.

"Well, I've wondered if I could shower kisses on your photo, for instance. I know one jane what wore out about a pickcher a week of her sweetie with kisses. Thinkin' about that made me feel kind o' foolish like; well, that wasn't a very good sign, was it? That girl didn't feel foolish—she let the world see her at it, an' if she blushed at all she blushed with pride, not with embarrassment. I might, maybe, meet a man whose photo I could kiss like that; but, I don't mind tellin' you, if that's coming to me I got it to look forward to.

"I tried to imagine myself cookin' ham an' eggs for you in the mornin's. I got no prejudice against cookin'. But I just couldn't get myself properly posed in that advance rehearsal o' that scene as I run it over in my mind. Of course, if I was to marry you, I'd be there with the kitchen athaletics. But I just couldn' get up no enthusiasm over the prospect—I just couldn't, Mr. Clayton. Now, is that nach'ral if a girl is in love?

"Marriage to me, while it's always loomed up like the most wonderful thing on earth, never divorced itself from just that kind o' symbols, right down to the ground. Maybe a girl oughtn' to think about ham when she's thinkin' about love. But I got a notion, it's just such things as the smell o' vittles on a empty stomach durin' the mornin' grouch that knocks love forty feet from where it ought to stand, beamin' among the flowers, as the soft music plays an' the flavor o' kisses pervades the ozone.

"I know cookin' ham would smell to me like tube roses if that ham was brownin' for the appetite o' the man who could make me feel like I been imaginin' I oughta feel when I fall. But maybe I been expectin' far too much. Do you think I have, Mr. Clayton?"

"No," said he. "Your imagination is right. That's just the view of love that I have entertained. That's precisely the way I feel toward you.

"I, too, waited a long time, and wondered whether I would ever realize that overwhelming sensation that I dreamed about when I met the one woman. I had my doubts as to whether such a thing was possible. It is, I know. I got it when I began to love you.

"I, too, have tested it out since that talk we had thirty days ago. I've fancied you in a dust cap—and you looked to me like a queen; I've longed for a picture of you so that I might kiss it, and I could kiss it until I obliterated your beautiful features, and never feel any less than exalted.

"Your instinct on love is absolutely sound. It is as you surmise it should be. It should be as you surmise it should be. You have it pictured with full accuracy. I have fallen down.

"As much as it hurts me to say it, girlie, don't change your view on love; don't marry until you meet a man, the man, who fills that vast and womanly ideal that you have set. I, it seems, am not that man. Your dream of love is too beautiful, too holy to be destroyed on a man who can't fit into it.

"I tell you again, dear, I love you as you want to love some one. But if you can't love me as I love you I don't want you to waste yourself on me. That wouldn't be fair. I could argue with you—hold that what you feel toward me, the flatteringly friendly attitude you feel, is love; but my conscience wouldn't let me. You're in doubt; I'm not. I'm in love. I know what it signifies.

"So I won't attempt to misguide you.

"Maybe, as time goes along, you'll learn to love me. That, I do think, is quite possible. If you do, come to me—I'll be waiting. If you don't—I lose. Good night, honey. You're the most wonderful, the squarest, the cleanest, the loveliest girl in the world."

He rose and stretched out his hand.

Myrtle came to her feet, stepped forward, and took his hand.

"You're a prince," she whispered. "You're more than that—you're a man!"

He led her to the little hatrack in the little hall and there they stood a moment.

"I won't talk love to you again," said he, "until you show me that—that you want me to."

"I won't hold out on you," she assured him. "When I feel, if I feel, that I can give you the kind o' love you deserve, you won't have to puzzle about it. I'll be up an' up with you, like you been with me. An' if it's in me to ever love like a woman should I wanna tell you I think you started me a long way toward it in the last five minutes.

"Now, lemme live with my own thoughts about it a while longer. Maybe that ham an' egg pickcher might look all diff'rent to me after—after this."

"I hope so, dear. I'll wait and hope."

She started to say something, then she hesitated. He waited.

"What is it, girlie?" he urged.

She was blushing. Myrtle Crawford, the imperturbable, the blonde glacier, was blushing. She started to speak, but she was stammering. He took no advantage of her mood, but stood by, twiddling his hat.

"If—if I ask you something," she began, hesitatingly, "you—you won't think wrong o' me?"

"No—you may ask me anything. I think I'll understand."

"Well—this is a hard one to ask. I never asked nothin' like it before. If I ask you to do somethin'—somethin' not so very hard, maybe, to do—will you do it?"

"Certainly, if I can. What is it?"

"O, you can, all right. Gee—I don't know how to say it. I—I—well, I've alwus read an' heard—an' sort o' dreamed, too—that there was kind o' magic in—in the first kiss!"

He reached for her with both hands.

She backed away one step.

"Please," she begged, "I haven't finished. I alwus thought that when I'd let a man kiss me it'd be unconditional surrender. I never dreamt I'd ever ask a man to kiss me, least of all a man I wasn't ready to surrender to.

"But here's what I got in my heart:

"You been so grand, so downright upright, that I wanna love you. They say the first kiss is such a marvelous thing. Well, maybe if I get it—from you—maybe that might push me across that line I been talkin' about. I wanna give you that much start—you got it comin' to you, an' I want you to have it.

"So, I'm gonna ask you to kiss me."

He started again.

"Just one moment. I'm gonna ask you to kiss me, an' after that to go right away. Then, with the first love kiss I've ever had on my lips, I'll pray an' I'll try to love you. If that don't put it over it'll never happen. Now, do you understand the spirit in which I ask you this strange an' maybe, sinful favor?"

"Entirely. And I love and respect you more than ever for it."

"An' then you'll go?"

"Immediately."

Harry Clayton held forth his wide stretched arms and Myrtle the unkissed, walked, with head erect and eyes forward, into them. His arms closed fast about her. He drew her tight into a trembling embrace. His lips found hers, and there they clung. It seemed to Myrtle that they clung there for hours. But when they drew away it seemed to her they had been there only one transitory second.

Limply his arms fell away.

She mumbled a good night and he answered her. Then he opened the door, went out, and away.

Myrtle stood, in the vestibule until the sound of his footsteps had faded out.

Then she ran to her room and shut the door.

And her poor, perturbed, adoring old mother sat up for hours, cogitating on the strange circumstance that, for the first time in her life, her daughter had gone to bed without kissing her.

give him. She would pay only part of the weekly grocery bill and let Jack have the money.

All afternoon her mind dwelt on the prize story contest. If she should win that $1,000—O, dear Lord, what couldn't she do with it! Elsie could have the tonic—a summer in the country—there would be no unpaid bills to haunt her dreams. She saw approaching all too fast the day when Carol would announce her engagement and the prospect of an early marriage—when, no matter how modestly they planned both trousseau and wedding—there was no money to meet the extra expense; that crisis, too, could be safely met.

She would have to steal time to do it—at night mainly—but she must write that story—that wonderful, prize winning story!

She never knew how she got through the next few weeks. Mancel Ward, taking the course at the reserve officers' camp at Fort Sheridan, proposed to Carol the night of the party and was accepted. She had come in late and tiptoed to the room where her mother and Elsie slept in their twin beds. Mrs. Manning, lying awake, her tired brain revolving the various problems confronting her—crucified by her maternal love—heard the light footfall and half rose in her bed. At that movement Carol had flown to her, her soft, hot cheek pressed to her mother's—telling her in happy whispers all about the most wonderful night in her life. "And, mother, if he gets his commission (of course he will), he is going home and he wants me to come down and meet his people. They have a fine old place down south—then, as soon as he knows where he is to be sent, we're to be married. He'll know early in the fall and we could be married some time in September. Isn't it glorious?"

In the darkness there was no need for the forced smile, and Mrs. Manning's voice gave no indication of her sinking spirit; it was all a mother's voice should be—so understanding, so loving? Carol went to her room with no cloud upon her new happiness.

They announced it at breakfast the next morning. Billy, sitting opposite his mother, looked up at her quickly. There were deep creases between Billy's eyes, and he had the strained, tense look of the young business man working overtime. Almost painfully honest and blunt, he was also highly strung and nervous. The family always acted with considerable diplomacy where Billy was concerned. In this case he spoke with his usual directness. "Where's the money for clothes and the wedding coming from, mam? We can barely meet our expenses now."

The joy went out of Carol's face like a light extinguished, and she, too, turned to her mother. "You didn't say—but you sounded as though it was all right last night, mother—I took it for granted——"

"It is all right," was Mrs. Manning's quick rejoinder. "Brother doesn't know how we can manage when we try. We didn't know we could have a party dress last night, but we did and a lovely one at that. We'll have to skimp some, but we're used to that, and Mancel won't expect a big affair."

Carol broke in, her happy confidence restored, while Billy drank his coffee in silence, "O, no; he says the simpler the better. His people will come, of course, with some of his officer friends; these and the few we want won't make many—not over fifty."

Again Billy looked at his mother and their eyes met. Mrs. Manning was a little afraid of this scrutiny of her eldest son. She sometimes felt her ever ready smile did not deceive him as readily as the others.

Stealthily, at odd hours—whenever she could get away from family observation (and those times were all too few)—Mrs. Manning wrote. It had to be finished by the first of May; the decision was to be rendered in September.

It was becoming uncomfortable to meet tradespeople—necessary to resort to subterfuges, any excuse to account for unpaid bills. She robbed Peter to pay Paul with a gentle, disarming smile—and she hated it with a hatred that bit into her soul. A gentlewoman of fine perceptions and breeding, she met these sordid details day by day because of the beautiful daughter whose pride must be saved at any cost to her own; for the sake of the little son whose development must be fostered along right lines—for the child whose tenure of life was so frail—for the whole family appearance that community respect demanded.

She hardly dared read the story when it was completed, and sent it off with grave misgiving, realizing the old facility of expression was lacking. As the weeks dragged by, to the subterfuges outside began to be added evasions within the family. "But, mother, can't I buy the material today? There's such a lot of handwork to be done, and we can't leave it to the last minute," was Carol's constant wail. With the coming of hot weather a tonic for Elsie became imperative. Her fragile, transparent look caused Mrs. Manning to brood over her with an unnamed terror tugging at her heart. The Boy Scouts were going into camp and Billy had to come to the rescue with money for car fare and equipment—money he could ill afford to spare. Somehow the bills assumed proportions she had not dreamed of. Though she paid on them each week, no human ingenuity could meet them entirely, and she dared not draw further upon the principal of her income.

Mancel received his commission in August and was invited to dinner. He came, a splendid looking young soldier, and Mrs. Manning sat at the head of her daintily appointed table, while Billy, with that fine courtesy which was a natural inheritance of manner, was an agreeable host. If a stranger had looked in on the family group, well dressed, well served, smiling and merry, would he have suspected there was a skeleton at the feast? Certainly Lieut. Mancel Ward only blessed his lucky stars for leading him to an alliance with this apparently well to do, charming family, so much like his own in the spacious home down south.

When he had gone and Carol drooped like a flower bereft of the sun, Mrs. Manning, against all the dictates of her judgment, ran an account at one of the large stores and bought material for the beginning of Carol's trousseau. She thought of borrowing, but there was no relative or friend to whom she could tell a sufficiently plausible story to be convincing. Besides that would be a reflection on Billy he would find hard to forgive. She dreaded the day of reckoning when he would know of the debts already incurred. She must, must win that prize!

Fragments of her story began to haunt her at night. Poorly constructed sentences, changes she realized would have made for a better balance in the plot. It became a distorted sort of thing which her imagination could not bring back into proper proportion.

Elsie failed visibly and the doctor counseled a lake trip or a journey to the coast. Carol lived on the letters she received and, wrapped in her dream, became sweetly selfish in her demands for material with which to clothe the dainty person she was to bestow upon her love.

By paying in little installments here and there, the weary mother managed to keep her head above water, but knew unless she won the story prize that flood must overtake and submerge her. If she only might go down alone—but what of Elsie, of Jack, of Carol, of the terrible burden thrown suddenly upon Billy and Mavis? As the cost of living climbed higher and higher, her gentle nature hardened into bitter resentment. Why should they, so fitted for the finer things of life, be repressed, denied, that a few might, by accumulating colossal fortunes, gratify a love of power. These thoughts were, however, but the flotsam and jetsam on the tide of anxiety and suspense, the buffeting of which wore her out in body and mind.

The family began to notice her wan appearance at last.

"Mother, you're beginning to look almost as frail as Elsie," said Billy one evening. "I wish to heaven I could send you both away for awhile."

Carol came out of her dream and gave her mother a startled glance. "You're not worrying about that trip south, are you, mother? I've given that up; I'd rather take what it would cost for clothes."

Billy nodded approvingly. "Good for you, Carol. That's what you've been worrying about, isn't it, mother?"

The old, reassuring smile came with an effort. How little they knew they had guessed at only one drop in the ocean of fears that assailed her.

Mancel wrote he would be up by the 15th of September. The 28th was the date set for the wedding. The last of August the September number of the magazine would announce the winner of the contest. Jack came home from camp early in the month—a brown, muscular boy, who breezed in and out with a devouring hunger that sent the market thermometer up several degrees. The hot days, the incessant work, the gnawing cares, told heavily upon her strength.

Carol's wardrobe was nearly completed. Only the wedding dress was left to be planned for and made. Knowing she did not dare add the cost of it to her already large bill, without running the risk of a mortifying demand for immediate payment, Mrs. Manning put Carol off on one pretext or another.

Would the day for the magazine announcement never arrive? Yet even as she longed for she dreaded it. What if she did not win? The greatness of her emergency had, she feared, fostered a false hope. If her story came back she must go down in a wreck so overwhelming it would drag not only her but all her loved ones into depths she shuddered to think of. The scorn of tradespeople and neighbors—Carol estranged from Mancel—Elsie killed by lack of proper care—Jack hanging his head in shame—Billy and Mavis crushed by the publicity! Collectors would swoop down on them like so many vultures. With thoughts like these were the long hours haunted.

Then one day as she passed a drug store window the face of a laughing girl on a magazine cover met her eyes. A sudden weakness swept over her and she put her hand against the pane to steady herself. It had come! Behind that smiling face of good omen lay her fate! Dared she face it? There had been a peculiar feeling in her head for some days past—it bothered her now and she waited for it to pass before going into the store for the book. She hardly knew how she got it, but realized she was all but running toward home. She did not open it upon the street; she was not sure of her own behavior.

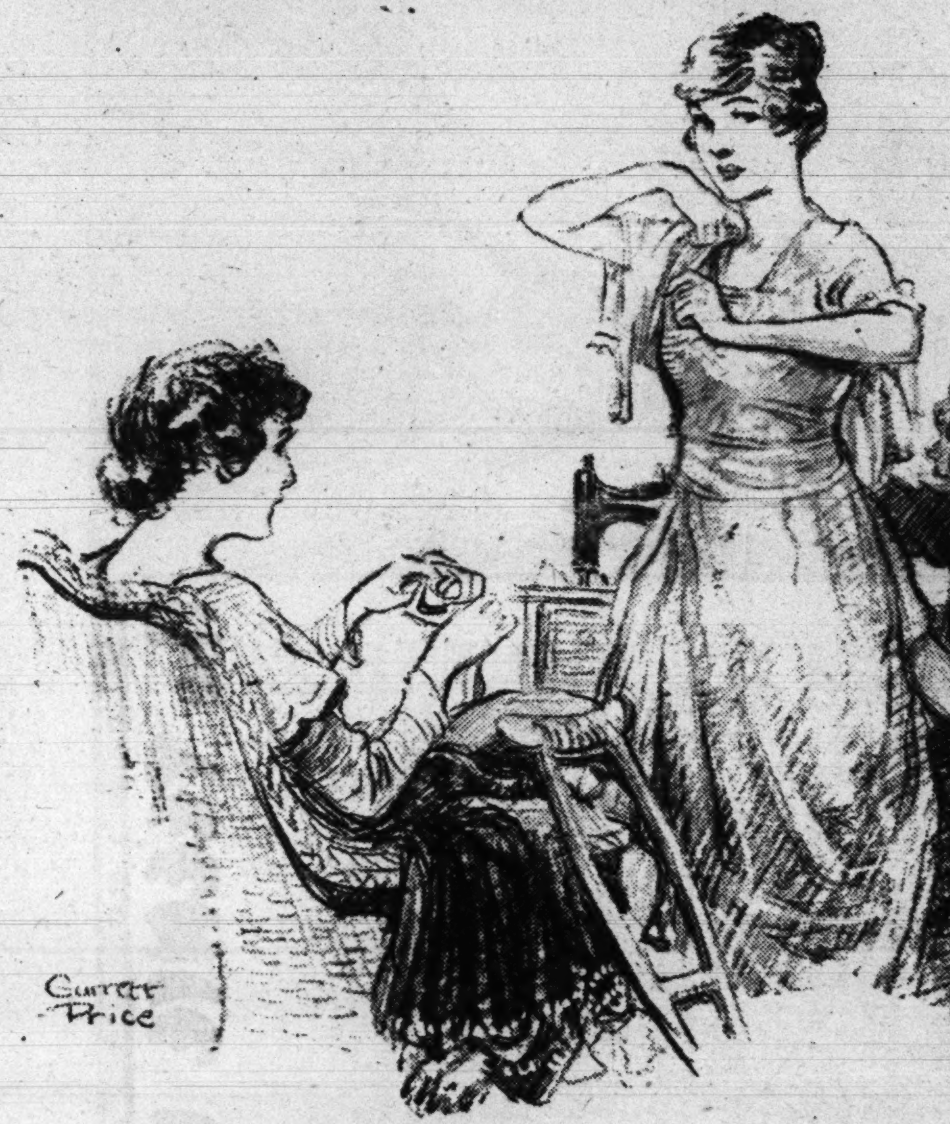
Inside the house all was still. Carol and Mavis were downtown, Jack out, and Elsie—presumably—asleep. She went into the dining room and spread the magazine out on the table. She tried with awkward fingers to find the announcement. Again there was that queer feeling in her head—something blurred her vision, then suddenly it cleared. At last, in the center of a large white page there was a name!

With a long, long sigh she sat down, crossed her arms upon the magazine, and let her head sink slowly forward. Her hand satchel fell from the table, opened, scattering a sheaf of bills upon the floor at her feet.

How long she lay there she never knew. She heard Elsie come out of her room and the click of her crutches as she went down the hall. She realized vaguely the girl was slowly descending the stairs—an effort she seldom made. After awhile she thought she heard a cry, but still that immense lethargy lay upon her and she did not move. The front door slammed and Elsie was coming through the hall as she had never heard her come before. Her young voice rang out, sounding sharp with a sort of nervous joy: "Mother, where are you?" Still with her head bowed upon her arms, Mrs. Manning lay inert, silent.

Then Elsie entered—a glorified Elsie—her face flushed, joy shining in her eyes. She limped across and raised her mother's haggard, tear wet face. "Mother, darling mother—listen! I never told, but all those mornings you thought I was sleeping I was writing—I used to pretend when you looked in—and I've won! Do you hear, mother? I wrote under a nom de plume—but I've won a prize story contest—a thousand dollars!" Mutely they clung to each other while Elsie's beautiful eyes filled with the tears which fell and mingled with her mother's.

"I knew all along why you were suffering. I understood," she whispered at last. "I prayed for it—but I didn't dare hope I would win." With eyes still wet they smiled at each other with a happiness too deep for words. Then Mrs. Manning stooped and picked up the bills scattered at her feet.



"Carol's wardrobe was nearly completed. Only the wedding dress was left to be made."

I'd have had her in my arms in two winks, so that all hell and a policeman couldn't have busted my holt till she's said she loved me.

"She shriveled him with a look the likes of which ain't strayed over the Mason-Dixie line since Lee surrendered, and swept by us, invitin' an' horspitable as an iceberg in a cross sea. Her cab door slammed, and I yanked Morrow out of there more dead than alive.

"'Let me go home,' says he wearily.

"'You bet!' I snorts. 'It's time you tucked in. The dew is fallin', and some rude person might accost you. You big slov! There's a man's work to do tonight, and, as I don't seem to have no competition in holding the title, I s'pose it's my lead.' I throwed him into a carriage. 'You'd best put on your nighty, and have the maid turn down your light. Sweet dreams, Gussie!' I was plumb sore on him. History don't record no divorce suits in the stone age, when a domestic inclined man allus toted a white oak billy studded with wire nails, according to the pictures, and didn't scruple to use it, both at home and abroad. Women was hairy them days, and harder to make love, honor, and obey; but principles is undyin'.

"I boarded another cab.

"'Drive me to number ——,' giving him the address I'd heard her use.

"'Who is it?' came her voice when I rang the bell.

"'Messenger boy,' I replies, perjuring my vocal cords.

"When she opened the door I pushed through and closed it behind me.

"'What does this mean?' she cried. 'Help!'

"'Shut up! It means you're killing the best boy in the world, and I want to know why.'

"'Who are you?'

"'I'm Bill Joyce, your husband's pardner. Old Tarantula Bill, that don't fear no man, woman, or child that roams the forest. I'm here to find what ails you——"

"'Leave this house, sir!'

"'Well, not to any extent. You're a good girl; I knowed it when I first seen your picture. Now, I want you to tell me——'

"'Insolent! Shall I call the police?' Her voice was icy, and she stood as solid as stone.

"'Madam, I'm as gentle as a jellyfish, and peaceful to a fault, but if you raise a row before I finish my talk I'll claim no responsibility over what occurs to the first eight or ten people that intrudes,' and I drawed my skinnin' knife, layin' it on the pianner. 'Philanthropy is raging through my innards, and two loving hearts need joining!'

"'I don't love him,' she quotes, like a phonograft, ignoring my cutlery.

"'I'll take exception to that ruling,' and I picks up a picture of Justus she'd dropped as I broke in. She never batted an eye.

"'I nursed that lad through brain fever, when all he could utter was your name.'

"'Has he been sick?' The first sign of spring lit up her peaks.

"''Most dead. Notice of the divorce done it. He's in bad shape yet.' Morrow never had a sick day in his life, but I stomped both feet on the soft pedal, and pulled out the tremulo stop.

"'O! O!' Her voice was soft, though she still stood like a birch.

"'Little girl'—I laid a hand on her shoulder—'we both love that boy. Come, now, what is the matter?'

"She flashed up like powder.

"'Matter? I thought he was a gentleman, even though he didn't love me; that he had a shred of honor, at least. But no! He went to Alaska and made a fortune. Then he squandered it, drinking, fighting, gambling, and frittering it away on women. Bah! Lewd creatures of the dance halls, too.'

"'Hold up! Your dope sheet is 'way to the bad. There's something wrong with your libretto. Who told you all that?'

"'Never mind. I have proof. Look at these, and you dare to ask me why I left him?'

"She dragged out some pictures and throwed 'em at me.

"'Sh! Why didn't I let the kid kill him?' says I through my teeth.

"The first was the gambling room of the Reception. There stood Morrow with the men under foot; there was the bottles and glasses, the chips and cards, and also the distressful spectacle of Tarantula Bill Joyce, a number twelve man, all gleaming teeth and rolling eyeballs, inserting hisself into a number nine opening, and doing surprising well at it.

"'Look at them. Look at them well,' she gibed.

"The second was the Gold Belt dance hall, with the kid cavorting through a drunken orgy of painted ladies like a bull in a pansy patch. But the other—it took my breath away till I felt I was on smooth ice with cracks showing. It was the inside of a cabin, after a big 'pot-latch,' displaying a table littered up with fizz bottles and dishes galore. Diamond Tooth Lou stood on a chair waving kisses and spilling booze from a mug. In the center stood Morrow with another girl nestling agin his boosum most horrible lovin'. Gee! It was a home splitter, and it left me sparring for wind. The whole thing exhaled an air of debauchery that would make a wooden Indian blush. No one thing in particular; just the general local color of a thousand dollar bender.

"'Charming, isn't it?' she sneered.

"'I don't savvy the burro. There's something phony about it. I can explain the other two, but this one——' Then it come to me in a flash. The man's face was perfect, but he wore knickerbockers! Now, to my personal knowledge, the only being that ever invaded Rampart City in them things was R. Alonzo Struthers.

"'There's secrets of the darkroom that I ain't wise to,' says I, 'but I feel that this is going to be a bad night for the newspaper enterprise of Frisco if it don't explain. I'll fetch the man that busted your Larrys and Peanuts.'

"'Our what?' says she.

"'Larrys and Peanuts—that's Roman. The kid told me all 'bout 'em. They're sort of little cheap gods!'

"'Will you ever go?' she snapped. 'I don't need your help. Tell him I hate him!' She stamped her foot, and the iron come into her again till the pride of all Kentucky blazed in her eyes.

"She couldn't understand my explanations no more than I could, so I ducked. As I backed out the door, though, I seen her crumple up and settle all of a heap on the floor. She certainly did hate that man scandalous.

"I'm glad some editors work nights. Struthers wasn't overjoyed at my call, particular, as I strayed in with two janitors dangling from me. They said he was busy and couldn't be interrupted, and they seemed to insist on it.

"'It's a bully night,' says I, by way of epigram, unhooking the pair of bouncers. 'You wouldn't like me to take you ridin', perhaps?'

"'Are you drunk, or crazy?' says he. 'What do you mean by breaking into my office? I can't talk to you; we're just going to press.'

"'I'd like to stay and watch it,' says I, 'but I've got a news item for you.' At the same time I draws my skinner and lays it on the back of his neck, tempting. Steel, in the lamplight, is discouraging to some temperaments. One of the bodyguards was took with urgent business, and left a streamer of funny noises behind him, while the other gave autumn leaf imitations in the corner. Struthers looked like a dose of seasickness on a sour stomach.

"'Get your hat. Quick!' I jabbed him gentle and encouraging.

"Age allus commands respect. Therefore, the sight of a six foot, grizzled Klondiker in a wide hat benevolently prodding the night editor in the short ribs and apple sauce with eight bright and chilly inches engendered a certain respect in the reportorial staff.

"'You're going to tell Mrs. Morrow all about the pretty pictures,' I says like a father.

"'Let me go, damn you!' he frothed, but I wedged him into a corner of the cab and took off his collar—in strips. It interfered with his breathing, as I couldn't get a holt low enough to regulate his respiration. He kicked out two cab windows, but I bumped his head agin the woodwork, by way of repartee. It was a real pleasure, not to say recreation, experimenting with the noises he made. Seldom I get a neck I give a cuss to squeeze. His was number fifteen at first, by the feel; but I reduced it a quarter size at a time.

"When we got there I helped him out, one hand under his chin, the other back of his ears. I done it as much from regard of the neighbors as animosities to him, for it was the still, medium small hours. I tiptoed in with my treatise on the infamies of photography gurgling under my hand, but at the door I stopped. It was ajar; and there, under the light, I spied Morrow. In his arms I got glimpses of black lace, and wavy, brown hair, and a white cheek that he was accomplishing wonders with. They wouldn't have heard a manhole explosion.

"'He's still fittin' to be my pardner,' I thinks, and then I heard Struthers' teeth chatter and grind. I looked at him, and the secret of the whole play came to me.

"Never having known the divine passion, it ain't for me to judge, but I tightened on his voice box and whispered:

"'You've outlived your period of usefulness, Struthers, and it's time to go. Let us part friends, however.' So I bade him Godspeed—from the top step.

"Looking back on the evening now, that adieu was my only mistake. I limped for a week—he had a bottle in his hip pocket."

The CONTEST by Ella Oldham Burroughs

It Meant a Good Deal in One Family.

MRS. MANNING made a hot suds and washed out the dish towels, shook them and hung them on the back porch to dry. Thank goodness, the breakfast things were out of the way. She glanced toward the dining room where invalid Elsie sat by the window, her thin, colorless face bent over a magazine. She thought how pretty the fine, light hair looked in the sunshine.

Some one in the front of the apartment was moving about with a carpet sweeper. It was Mavis, Billy's wife, straightening the living room. Caroline, dear, proud, impatient Carol, had gone to market. Mrs. Manning gave a quick sigh as she thought of her; a sigh which her lips strove to stifle quickly, for fear of Elsie's sensitive ears. Little Jack—his twelve important years would have scorned that "little"—was in school. She glanced at the clock—after 9 already—and knew she must hurry if she were to get through the work laid out for the morning before it was time to start lunch. Mavis came back with broom and sweeper.

"Elsie, do you feel able to dust this morning?" she asked. Elsie looked up and one was startled by the beauty of her eyes; deep blue and thick lashed, they were—full of dreams and suffering. She smiled at her sister-in-law and reached for the crutch beside her chair. She stopped and kissed Mavis lightly, in a loving little way she had, and went on down the hall. Mavis stepped into the kitchen.

"How does Elsie seem to you, mother?" she asked. The older woman looked up anxiously. "A little stronger, I think, don't you? She's sleeping better. What she needs is the tonic to give her an appetite."

Again the stifled sigh as she remembered they had been compelled to give up the medicine when the price increased from 50 to 75 cents a bottle.

There was a knock on the back door and Mavis opened it. A dot of a child stood there shyly smiling. "Muvver wants to know if you can spare an egg?"

Mavis drew her in, knelt down and put both arms hungrily about her. "We can spare two of them, honey love, if you want them." She hugged the baby and kissed the soft little neck. "Can you stay awhile?" Dot shook her head and went out.

Mavis went to the window and gazed at the yard below, noting the young things springing to life—tulips and hyacinths in the border along the walk, with lilac bloom showing through the dark green leaves of the bushes. A young robin hopped across the grass spears and sparrows twittered under the eaves of the porch. The air which had come in through the open door when Dot entered was a combination of frost and fire. Mavis, full bosomed, Madonna eyed, brooding over her denied maternal longings, felt the salt of bitter tears on her cheek.

Carol came in with her arms full of bundles and looked at them with eyes as deeply blue as Elsie's, but holding, instead of dreams, a world of vital life and the joy of it within their depths. One did not have to look twice at Carol to know she was beautiful. A skin, satin smooth and flushed like early dawn; black brows etched delicately above clear, shining eyes. Bronze hair that rippled into light and sank into shadows with every turn of her head, and a mouth and chin stolen from a Greek goddess. Nature does a masterpiece like that once in a decade and poises it exquisitely upon a neck and body, every curving line of which is a poem in symmetry. Then circumstance takes it and gives it an environment of genteel poverty which often mars the physical and wrecks the spiritual beauty.

Quite unmindful of goddess like qualities, she threw her packages upon the table and sat down on the edge of it while she removed her gloves. "Chops were clear out of sight, mother mine, so I got hamburger instead; was that all right?"

Mrs. Manning was looking over the packages with troubled eyes, scanning the charge slip in her hand. Only five simple staples and the bill was over $2. It was always that now, and there were still all the other items of household expense—rent, clothing, and the incidentals that always total so large.

An inner despair seized Mrs. Manning, but the smile with which she met the troubled young eyes turned upon her held no hint of it. "Let's get busy, dears, and start on Carol's dress. It won't be ready for tomorrow night if we don't hurry."

"As Mavis went out, Carol laid a detaining hand on her mother's arm. "I asked Mancel out to dinner tomorrow; he has so far to come, you know."

"Of course, dear, I'm glad you did." Mrs. Manning smiled again, as her mind flew swiftly to the added expense. A company dinner! Only those who know can understand the tragedy of the commonplace. She hurried to get the dining room ready for their sewing bee and picked up the magazine Elsie had dropped when she left to do the dusting. An announcement confronted her on the first page:

"Enter the prize story contest. One thousand dollars for the best story."

Numerous details followed as to the rules governing the contest, and Mrs. Manning let no single word escape her. In her younger days she had written, mainly for the joy of self-expression. There had been a few poems published and in a drawer lay a much thumbed magazine containing her one and only contribution to fiction. The children had been immensely proud of that literary achievement and had urged her to continue, but with Mr. Manning's death had come the responsibility of managing on the small income he had left her. With Carol's help she had contrived to do without servants. For the last year they had been dipping into the principal of their income, the high prices and the necessity for keeping up appearances drawing heavily upon their resources.

Mavis, Carol, and Elsie came into the room bearing all the implements of dressmaking, together with shimmering fabrics of blue and silver. "Carol, you'll look like a dream in this!" Mavis cried, her dark eyes alight with pleasure. "Elsie, love, no one but you can make the satin roses for the waist and skirt. Mother, can't Jack have his lunch in the kitchen today and the rest have a pickup when we get hungry? Then we can spread things around in here without being disturbed."

A born manager, Mavis had them all at their tasks, which wer really no tasks at all to these beauty loving women. Carol tried on and took off until her feet were weary. Elsie turned the satin into the deep heart and pale petals of lovely roses, and Mrs. Manning, as she hemmed and tucked, saw the printed words, "Prize story contest! $1,000!" over and over. O, if she could—if she only could!

In the midst of her thoughts Jack stormed in like a small cyclone. "O, I say, mother," he shouted before fairly inside the door, "I'm a Boy Scout now, and, gee whiz, I've got to have a uniform! I'm to bring the money to school Monday." He came into the room, a straight, manly chap, dark eyed and with cheeks like glowing apples. "Say, mother, can I?"

Mrs. Manning looked up and the little creases about her lips formed their accustomed smile. "I guess so, dear; your lunch is on the kitchen table today—we had to use the dining room." All this half smothered in Jack's hug of delight, while inside was the ache of How? How?

Carol's party gown had been fashioned mainly of some bygone finery of her own, yet it had to be modernized with chiffon and silver lace and the satin for the roses. Then there were the silk hose and slippers to match—a chill apprehension seized Mrs. Manning, remembering the unpaid milk bill allowed to grow to pay for this one perfect evening for her beautiful daughter. And now Jack wanted a Scout uniform! He must have it—he needed all the discipline and inspiring good that organization could

IN THE LAND OF COTTON

Mayville's Social Barrier of More Than Fifty Years Standing Is Suddenly Swept Away.

by Oney Fred Sweet

WHEN the folding blinds of the long windows were closed Col. Beufort's home was cool even on the hottest of days. After the fashion of other big southern homes of the period in which it was built, the kitchen had been established as a place apart; there were plenty of Negro servants in those days to carry the food across the yard.

The colonel had long since passed away. Most of the old Negro servants were gone. But Mrs. Beufort still presided over the big house to which she had come as a girl bride. She was nearing 80 now. She lived pretty much in the past—in the days when the Yankee officers had taken the house for their headquarters; in the days when the colonel had come home, weary and wounded; in the days when almost the unbelievable had happened and the Confederacy had lost.

Oh, it all had been half a century ago. But it had all happened in Mrs. Beufort's pink girlhood. And she had kept the big house as it had been in ante-bellum days. And now her two granddaughters—Miss Alice and Miss Ruth, both in their pink girlhood—were visiting her for the summer.

The three were at dinner in the darkened dining room. Through the blinds came the fragrance of the garden. A Negro woman shuffled about the table pouring iced tea.

"But, grandma, Henry Ellis is a nice boy," pouted Miss Alice. "I don't see why you are opposed to his coming here."

"The Henry Ellis I knew was a carpetbagger," answered Mrs. Beufort, squaring her shoulders. "No Ellis has ever entered this house or any of the better homes in Mayville. There are too many of us who remember. Why the family insisted in staying on here is more than I could ever understand."

"And you don't like Tom Clemsworth, either?" questioned Miss Ruth, wistfully.

"Old Lige Clemsworth was a 'home made Yankee,'" gasped Mrs. Beufort. "When the rest of our men had gone out to fight he stayed right here in Mayville and profited by our misfortunes. It was not that he loved the Union. He simply loved himself. No Clemsworth has ever entered this home or any of the better homes in Mayville. I don't see how you girls ever happened to meet either of those boys."

"But times are so changed, grandmother," pleaded Ruth, "and you have said yourself you look at it all differently than you used to."

"I look at it differently," acknowledged the old lady, "but I have never forgiven the Yankee officer who took my silver, nor Henry Ellis, the carpetbagger, nor Lige Clemsworth, the 'home made Yankee.' I don't even want to hear the mention of their names."

For a time there was silence. The girls knew their grandmother was wholly in the past. She was reviewing again the proud days before the war, the four years of terrible sacrifice, the grief of the readjustment period, the years and years of struggle to meet the changed conditions. Yankee officers had used the house for headquarters, the Ku Klux clan had swept past the house on many a midnight. These things were all vivid to the gray haired woman—far more vivid than the days of now, when she puttered for a time each morning in the flower garden and sat for a time each evening on the pillared veranda.

"I don't believe you've ever seen Henry or Tom, either one," ventured Alice.

"I knew their grandfathers."

"But not the boys."

"My eyes are dim, anyhow, and there are times when I don't wish them to see."

"O, grandmother!"

"There, there, girls. You have lived like butterflies. You did not pass through the dark days. I have forgiven the north and her boys who fought, but I never could forgive the carpetbaggers and the home made Yankees, and I'm too old now. Mayville has never forgiven them. Yet they have hung on here and stood all the snubbing. I suppose they think there is no place like Mayville. There isn't. But it's nothing like it was before the war."

"You can't do a thing with her," sighed Alice when the girls were alone in the big, cool parlor and Mrs. Beufort had retired for her nap. "I suppose we don't understand. Imagine the Yankees overrunning this old house! And she was just a girl then. And they lost everything and the colonel came home with his wound. But it seems so long ago."

The girl went to the bookcase and picked up a tattered volume. She turned to its title, "The Rise and Fall of the Confederacy."

"We can't meet those boys again, that's certain," decided Ruth. "And I don't know when I ever met as nice a young fellow as Henry Ellis."

"I know a nicer one," interrupted Alice. "Tom Clemsworth."

Both girls laughed.

"Just our luck," nodded Ruth; "and above all things we've got to please Grandmother Beaufort."

The summer passed and the girls returned to Memphis. But the following summer brought them back to Mayville. Mayville was a delightful spot. There was not a more charming small, out of the way town in all Dixie. It had no factories, no floating population. The cotton and the corn stretched within a few blocks of the courthouse square—the courthouse square with its monument "to our Confederate dead."

But there was something aside from the charm of the town and the restfulness of Grandmother Beufort's big home that drew the girls back. They had briefly bidden goodby to Henry and Tom. There had been no correspondence, and yet—

And yet they met one night on the courthouse square—the four of them. It was moonlight and a mockingbird was singing and the air was hushed and sweet with blossoms.

The four walked home together. They swung open the big iron gate and they seated themselves by the fountain beneath the magnolia tree. They were sitting there when Grandmother Beufort came out on the veranda.

"I thought she was in bed!" gasped Ruth. "All of you sit perfectly still and I'll go back and get her in the house."

The girl approached the veranda. Her filmy gown was of modern cut, her hair done in the latest style of coiffure as she crossed the lawn that had once known crinolines and poke bonnets.

"The Red Cross meeting is over, grandmother," she began. "We've contracted for I don't know how many sweaters and bandages."

"And you told them I would help?"

"We told them, grandmother."

"Poor boys, they'll need them. I know what war is. I know what war is."

"Aren't you afraid of the night air, grandmother?"

"Nonsense! I was about to come out by the fountain."

The boys arose as she approached. They stood revealed in the soft moonlight, their hats removed, their shoulders bent forward in a bow. They were in the uniform of their country.

"Grandmother, this is Mr. Ellis and Mr. Clemsworth."

The shade from the magnolia concealed the expression which swept over the aged woman's face. She took the seat offered.

"War again," she answered; "our country is at war again."

"And, grandmother," Ruth went on, "we're going to start a Red Cross lunchroom in the basement of the courthouse. We've pledged a certain amount and we're going to raise it that way. I'm going to have charge one day each week."

"Yes," commented Mrs. Beufort. But she was scarcely listening; she was thinking. Suddenly she turned toward the boys.

"You boys are already in the service?"

"We have been in camp for three months, madame. We are here on furlough. We go back again tomorrow night, and, according to rumor, we sail very soon for France. We're anxious to get started.

Mrs. Beufort arose. She was growing feeble, but her shoulders were erect. "Let us go into the house," she suggested. "I will have Sarah serve us ices."

A turning on of the lights revealed the painting of the colonel above the fireplace.

"They're here in our home—the Ellises and the Clemsworths," announced Mrs. Beufort, looking at the portrait. "And it's all right, colonel. You would say so yourself. It's all right."

"I always did think your Grandmother Ellis was a real woman," said Mrs. Beufort at length. "I think you resemble her some. You resemble her a great deal. And the colonel——"

"Now, grandmother, let's not go over the past too much," begged Ruth. "You must be tired."

"I'm not tired, dearie, but I'm going to bed. I'm going to leave you folks alone together. The Ellises and the Clemsworths—in this house. But it's all right, colonel. It's all right."

The SPLENDID CHANCE

SYNOPSIS.

Katherine wanted to paint well more than anything in the world, so she said good-by to Dick Conrad without a pang, offering a sisterly cheek for his salutation just before the boat slid away from the dock. She resented hotly the quizzical air of a young Englishman who happened on their leave-taking. One day a caricature she had made of him fluttered across the deck and he caught it. In the days that followed they were together a great deal, and just before she left the boat he asked if he might come to see her in Paris. She began her precious year of study, plunging with ardor into her work in the studio. When her friends, the Whartons, were about to leave Paris she mentioned Edgerton's proposed visit. They hastened to discourage the budding friendship, hinting that she is an ineligible party for a man of his rank and distinction. McNare, the surly young sculptor, whose studio is downstairs of Katherine's, had to appeal to her one night when his little girl was ill. The Surly Man proved to be not such a bear after all, and—Jeffrey comes to see her.

Katherine King, a young American art student, was busily chasing a career in Paris when the war broke out. The future was brilliant with promise, for she had love, friends and exceptional talents. How the mighty struggle changed her entire viewpoint, how she learned to reject petty things of life is told in this amazingly vivid tale of war ridden France.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT.

YOUNG LAUGHTER.

HE had smiled at her in silence, not trusting speech. For how could he tell her, without seeming a clumsy flatterer, that that unknown environment must be the rarest in the world since it had produced such a miracle of a girl, innocent, intelligent, self-reliant, brimming with young laughter and simple friendliness?

But his eyes had not been dumb and that moment at Versailles was among the most golden of her memories.

Now, in the little quiet that had fallen on them at the close of dinner they drained their tiny coffee cups and Edgerton drew out a slim cigar from a dark enameled case and asked for her permission.

As she assented, as the attendant waiter leaped from the outer gloom to the ritual of the lighting, she found herself thinking how natural it seemed to have him there with her—just as it used to seem natural to round the corner of the deck and find him tramping toward her, his head bent, his cap pulled low, his pipe in his mouth.

At that memory she laughed softly. "It should be your pipe," she murmured nodding at the cigar.

"You remember the pipe?"

With a ludicrous little moue, "It made a very strong impression upon me."

He feigned alarm. "O, come, you haven't it in for my pipe! What? I always use very good 'baccy." And he added, his blue eyes teasing, "You know I should hate to give up my pipe!"

"You wouldn't!" she retorted. "'A woman is only a woman——'"

He saw the sensitive color rise in her cheeks as she broke off. After all, why not in a restaurant?

"Remember that sketch of the pipe—and me—that you made?" he suddenly demanded. Perhaps he felt speech was safest.

She nodded, a mischievous sparkle in her face.

"I've it framed. On my desk. It—it always makes me think of the way you looked when you saw me looking at it!"

"I ought to have looked," murmured the girl obscurely.

"That's my mascot," said the captain fondly. "If it hadn't been for that bit of paper—flying out across my path——"

Katherine suddenly giggled. There was something little girlish and guilty in that giggle which brought the young man's eyes to her.

"Can't you guess why it flew across your path?" she suddenly demanded, her eyes alight with mischief.

"Eh? What?"

"I threw it."

"You—threw it?"

"I did." She was softly laughing at his mystification. "I'd just finished it. And you came tramping by again, so lordly and aloof, that a horrid impulse seized me. I wanted you to see yourself as others saw you. I thought you'd be furious. It wasn't flattering, you know. And so—I let it go—on the wings of chance. The wind did the rest."

She laughed again, that little prankish ripple of a laugh that enchanted him.

He affected sternness. "You—minx!" he brought out. "I thought you looked like a kitten in the cream—and I thought it was for discovery of your wicked pencil and I was sorry for you. Sorry! Ha!"

"That was when I began to like you," she amiably confessed.

"You began to like me!"

"It had to have some beginning on something! You didn't suppose, did you, that I—I evolved this violent friendship on first sight?"

But that was an unfortunate speech. It brought back the memory of that actual first sight, and a wave of hasty color surged into her cheeks and into his. Once they had treated that encounter laughingly but now that note was too forced. He felt shot with pain that another man's arms had been around her, another man's lips had gathered her sweetness to himself, even in the renunciation of farewell. He lowered his eyes from that flushing face, that sensitively trembling mouth.

Her own eyes were on her plate. She felt hot shame at the simple friendliness which had yielded her cheek to Dick Conrad. In deepening self-consciousness she felt as if she had ignorantly squandered a secret treasure. And to have been overseen, misinterpreted by him. Yet after all, she had been no more than a friend to Dick. No more.

Jeffrey leaned across the table, his lowered voice a little strained. "May I ask you—I know I've not the least right—but is that other man quite gone from your life, your thoughts? Is it a clear field?"

She raised her lids till her eyes were looking into his. They were dark as pools of shadowed water beneath the heavy lashes.

"Don't you understand," she said quietly, "that it could never have been—I could never have let him kiss me good-by—if he had been anything to me? He was just a—dear friend." Her voice trembled slightly. "He is a dear friend now—but a very droll one. For he has quite accepted the fact that I'll never be more to him, and to prove his own friendship and to save his pride perhaps, he writes me the oddest of jocular letters. Some day he'll announce in them the discovery of the one and only girl. Then he'll forget that he ever thought of me but as a friend."

"That wouldn't be possible," said Jeffrey with a clipped little smile. "Was he—forgive me, but I would like to know—was he some one that your parents would have cared for you to marry?"

Katherine's eyes grew vague. "Dick is a dear boy—and his father is a millionaire——" she felt a queer little pride in bringing that home to Edgerton—"and my people would have been quite glad if I had loved him, but—but they never said one word to advise it. And if I loved the town doctor's son, who is also a dear and very good to his mother, they would have been just as pleased, if you can believe it. They're tremendously unworldly souls. But I—I did think about it," she confessed. "I liked Dick—and I wanted to be able to do things for people, and have things—yes, and I wasn't sure that I'd ever care for anybody else, in a—a different way. And all the books are full of regretted might-have-beens."

She laughed uncertainly. "And so I did think about it. But I didn't want to. And my painting saved me. It took me away and kept me free for the chance of life—the splendid chance——"

She brought it out radiantly with shining eyes. Her face was like a suddenly glowing mirror that gave to him the stirred depths of her feeling. It was a magic phrase to her. It voiced that deep craving in her soul for high adventure in living, for glorious excitement, for fine passionate experience that would be the climax of all living. Watching her, the young man felt both the glow of answering youthful enthusiasm and a leap of anxious pity for so sentient a creature, knowing so little, expectant of so much, exposed so confidently to all the world might do. All the masculine impulse of protectiveness rose in him. He felt a sudden desire to clasp that slim hand lying on the table. He wanted to be alone with her, to speak his ardor, his devotion.

The waiter brought the bill. His train was inexorable.

The ride back under an April sky sown with stars was a silent one. He was solicitous for her comfort, but his hand did not outstay its privilege of drawing the wraps about her. In him, more than in her, was the consciousness of the exceptional conditions of their companionship, of her trustful, chaperonless estate. Everything that was chivalrous in him restrained him, but his look, at parting at the door of her building, was charged with a sudden flash of revealing attraction that sent her from him on the winged feet of dreams.

That visit added a conscious excitement to her life, a quickening sense of something stirring about to happen. It was no longer possible to think of her friendship with Jeffrey Edgerton as a thing apart from her everyday world, for he had crossed the threshold of her Paris days, and though his visit remained something unmerged, separate, distinct, her sensitive memory was constantly flashing forth pictures of his presence.

Those few hours seemed to have peopled her Paris with recollections. There were the magic streets she had walked with him, the cabs she had taken, the meals she had shared. There was the tea in her studio. And she would look up sometimes from a letter she was writing and see him there, young and soldierly erect, in her big wicker chair.

And she remembered, with a queer little smile hovering about her lips, that he had totally forgotten to ask to see her work, had never once looked at the easel at the study of a head which she had carefully arranged there. Yet her smile was not the smile of a displeased artist, but a woman's smile.

However, she did not neglect her work in those days. She worked hard. It was not entirely that she was painting against time, as Guerin had accused, though something of that feeling unconsciously goaded her; but the creative spirit in her was deepening and taking on new strength and impetus. She had that sense of aliveness which comes to the creative artist in the freshness of his mood, that feeling of power surging and tingling to the finger tips.

The world appeared wonderful. She felt herself in a blessed place in it, with heart happiness and work happiness like Aurora's steeds at her chariot.

There was a feeling of impending gladness in the air. Her gayety, her exuberance dived and circled like swallows through all her moods. Every one was twice as delightful as before. The Surly Man was touching in his new found efforts at amiability. With so much inner happiness it was impossible not to pour it out upon every circumstance of her life.

April had flowered into May and May had blossomed into June. The misty laciness of the trees was lost in luxuriance; the sky was like broad, bright washes of watercolor. Every silvery stone of the gray old buildings, every arch of the bridges and gleam of the river was translated into stronger and brighter effect.

The Americans were in possession of Paris. The big hotels were crowded; the streets flashed with motors bearing beautifully gowned women on their rounds; the windows glittered with jewels and glowed with chiffons. Laurent's and Paillard's were crowded luncheon centers; there were gay throngs at tea on the terraces above the Seine; the songs of violins harmonized the discordant shrillness of human chatter at the restaurants at the Bois or at the Café de Paris; the theaters were visions of costumes.

Katherine felt a touch of the invasion in the increasing prices in the big shops. Other Americans were there, too; her own kind, as she called them—happy, eager looking people, with Baedeckers and little books under their arms, looking up galleries and tariffs, pilgrimaging to the Louvre, to Versailles, to Les Invalides, climbing Notre Dame. Some penetrated even to the threshold of her school and her restaurants.

More and more of these came as June went by and the vacation terms released the teachers, and often she encountered acquaintances, or acquaintances of acquaintances, and the little teakettle on her table boiled at several hospitable parties.

. . . .

It was on one of these that the Surly Man unexpectedly opened the door, and then turned as if he would bolt, but Katherine's quick call stayed him.

"Do come in," she invited. "We've been talking about you—for we've just been at the salon and seen your Prophet."

A perceptible thrill ran through her guests, two teachers and a young niece of theirs.

"Have you a—a piece of art gum?" said MacNare abruptly, demanding the first thing his eyes fell on. "I'm in a hurry for a bit——"

With a strong suggestion of intercepting him, Katherine flew to the cube of it that he was eyeing. Not for him so simple an escape! There was mischief in her eyes.

"But you must meet my guests," she declared and rushed the introductions as if fearing a bolt in the middle of them. "Won't you take some tea with us?" she added wickedly.

"Never drink it," he uttered hurriedly, but by now the ladies had found their tongues, and were trying to tell him how much, how very much, his work had meant to them, and especially his wonderful Prophet. And was it any particular prophet or just a symbol?

They hastened to say all the kind and flatteringly meant things which much impressed and none too resourceful ladies can find to say to the greatness of the moment, and MacNare glowered unresponsively upon them and edged to the door.

"But we mustn't drive you away—we were just going," one of the ladies protested and the rest rose obediently, gathering their wraps.

"But I'm going. I must get back to my work," said MacNare, and the eldest lady in ill omened inspiration, turned to him with deprecating but insinuating sweetness.

"And your studio is just under this, isn't it? Dear Miss King has been telling us a little about it. I know it's a great favor to ask, Mr. MacNare, and from such strangers, too, but perhaps as dear Miss King's friends and fellow-Americans and such admirers—you would let us just peep in the door and see some of those beautiful things in the making——?"

MacNare's dark glance flitted past the three suppliants and laid the burden of its wrath upon Katherine—who twinkled back impish delight.

"There's nothing to be seen," he said crisply. "Nothing I want any one to see."

"O but surely—we understand—if you'd just make us an exception?" the lady breathed, flustered but not knowing how gracefully to retreat from her importunities.

"It's a workshop—not a shop window," he said with his dry smile.

The smile misled them to further attempt. This time it was the niece who had pretty eyes. She raised them beseechingly.

"But that is just what makes it so interesting——"

"To ladies' curiosity?" he said ironically. "Good afternoon."

"He is a character, dear Miss King," breathed the eldest lady, with a politely dissembling air of enjoyment.

Katherine went down the stairs with them. When they had gone she rapped viciously upon the door of the first floor studio.

MacNare opened it a less than customary crack, then seeing her alone, he flung it wide.

She marched to a table littered with tools and clay and thumped down a cube of art gum.

"You forgot to take this away."

She was smiling but her tone held a peculiar dryness. He looked at her silently under his dark brows.

"You are a Surly Man!" she exploded, facing him in intense exasperation.

"O! Because I didn't let in that rabble——?"

"Rabble! O, it wouldn't have hurt you," she cried, "to have let those poor things have their 'peep' for half a minute."

"They'd never have gone."

"I'd had seen to that if you'd been so decent as to let them in."

"Decent!" he echoed irritably. "What earthly good would it have done?"

"Everything—to them. It would have given them the feeling that they were really seeing Paris and famous folk—and that poor lady would have carried back wonderful impressions to the little school she came from."

"Impressions!" he snorted. "The woman was a fool, an ignoramus——"

"Your tongue does lose itself in compliment."

"Why does she pretend to interests——"

"Dear man, they're all she has! She doesn't know that she doesn't know and it's too late to unlearn her. So you might as well be kind for she's such a tremendously good soul, with all sorts of heroisms and sacrifices in her narrow, deprived life that fifteen mile, she is, but I was all in when we got there, keepin' up with Justus. His eyes outshone the snow glitter and he sang—all the time he wasn't roasting me for being so slow—claimed I was active as a toadstool. A man ain't got no license to excite hisself unless he's struck pay dirt—or got a divorce.

"'Gi' me my mail, quick!' he says to Windy, who had tinkered up a one night stand postoffice and dealt out letters at five dollars per let.

"'Nothing doing,' says Windy.

"'O, yes, there is,' he replied, still smiling; 'she writes me every week.'

"'I got all there was at Dawson,' Windy give back, 'and there ain't a thing for you!'

"I consider the tragedy of this north country lies in its mail service. Uncle Sam institutes rural deliveries, so the bolomen can register poisoned arrowheads to the Igorrotes in exchange for recipes to make roulade of naval officers, but his American miners in Alaska go shy on home news for eight months every year.

"That was the last mail we had till June.

"When the river broke we cleaned up one hundred and eighty-seven dollars' worth of lovely yellow dust, and seven hundred and thirty-five dollars in beautiful yellow bills from the post.

"The first boat down from Dawson brought mail, and I stood beside him when he got his. He shook so he held on to the purser's window. Instead of a stack of squares overrun with female chiropody, there was only one for him—a long, hungry sport, with indications of a law firm in the northwest corner. It charmed him like a rattler. He seemed scared to open it. Two or three times he tried and stopped.

"'They're dead,' thinks I, and sure enough, when he'd looked, I knew it was so, and felt for his hand. Sympathy don't travel by word of mouth between pardners. It's the grip of the hand or the look of the eye.

"'What cause?' says I.

"He turned, and s'help me, I never want to see the like again. His face was plumb gray and dead, like wet ashes, while his eyes scorched through, all dry and hot. Lines was sinkin' into it as I looked.

"'It's worse,' says he, 'unless it's a joke.' He handed me the dope: 'In re Olive Troop Morrow vs. Justus Morrow,' and a letter stating that out of regard for her feelings, and bein' a gentleman, he wasn't expected to cause a scandal, but to let her get the divorce by default. No explanation; no word from her; nothing.

"God knows what the boy suffered the next few weeks, but he fought it out alone. She was proud, but he was prouder. Her silence hurt him the worst, of course; but what could he do? Go to her? Fine! Both of us broke and in debt. Also, there's such a thing as diggin' deep enough to scrape the varnish off of a man's self-respect, leavin' it raw and shrinking. No! He done like you or me—let her have her way. He took off the locket and hid it, and I never heard her name mentioned for a year.

"I'd been up creek for a whipsaw one day, and as I came back I heard voices in the cabin. 'Some musher out from town,' thinks I, till something in their tones made me stop in my tracks.

"I could hear the boy's voice, hoarse and throbbing, as though he dragged words out bleeding, then I heard the other one laugh—a nasty, sneering laugh that ended in a choking rattle, like a noose had tightened on his throat.

"I jumped for the door, and rounding the corner something near took me off my feet; something that shot through the air, all pretty and knickerbockery, with a two-faced cap and nice brown leggin's. Also, a little camera was harnessed to it by tugs. It arose, displaying the face of R. Alonzo Struthers, black and swollen, with chips stickin' in it where he'd hit the woodpile. He glared at Morrow, and his lips foamed like a crab out of water.

"'I hope I'm not intrudin',' I ventures.

"When the kid seen me, he says, soft and weak, like something ailed his palate:

"'Don't let me kill him, Billy.'

"Struthers spit, and picked splinters forth from his complexion.

"'I told you for your own good. It's common gossip,' says he. 'Everybody is laughing at you, and——'

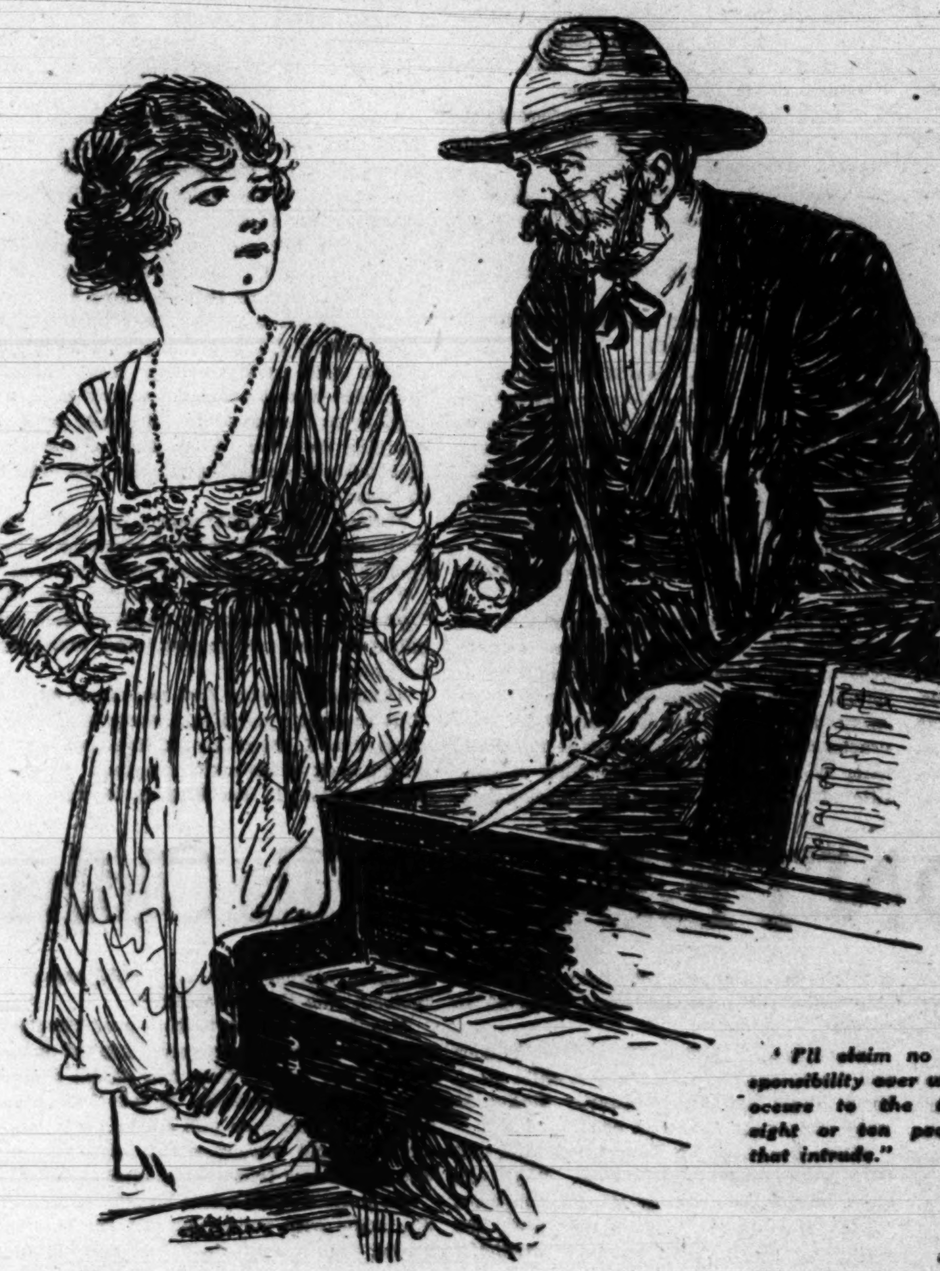
"Then I done a leap for life for the kid, 'cause the murder light blazed up white in his face, and he moved at the man like he had something serious in view.

"'Run, you idot!' I yells to Struthers, as I jammed the youngster back into the cabin. All of a sudden the gas went out of him and he broke, hanging to me like a baby.

"'It can't be,' he whispers. 'It can't be.' He throwed hisself onto a goods' box, and buried his face in his hands. It gripes me to hear a man cry, so I went to the creek for a pail of water.

"I never heard what Struthers said, but it don't take no Nick Carter to guess.

"That was the fall of the Fryin' Pan strike—do you mind it? Shakespeare George put us on, so me and the kid got in ahead of the stampede. We located one and two above discovery, and by Christmas we had a streak uncovered that was all gold. She was coarse, and we averaged six ounces a day in pickups. Man, that was ground! I've flashed my candle along the drift face, where it looked like gold had been shot in with a scatter-gun.



"I'll claim no responsibility over what occurs to the first eight or ten people that intrude."

"We was cleaned up and had our 'pokes' at the post when the first boat from Dawson smoked 'round the bend.

"Now, in them days, a man's averdupoise was his abstract of title. There was nothing said about records and patentees as long as you worked your ground; but, likewise, when you didn't work it, somebody else usually did. We had a thousand feet of as good dirt as ever laid out in the rain; but there was men around druin' to snipe it, and I knowed it was risky to leave. However, I saw what was gnawin' at the boy, and if ever a man needed a friend and criminal lawyer that was the time. According to the zodiac, certain persons, to the complainant unknown, had a mess of trouble comin' up and I wanted to have the bail money handy.

"We jumped camp together. I made oration to the general gnat-bitten populace, from the gangplank, to the effect that one William P. Joyce, trap, crap, and snap shooter, was due to happen back casual most any time, and any lady or gent desirous of witnessin', at first hand, a shutzenfest with live targets could be gratified by infestin' in person or by proxy the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of me and the kid.

"Well, we hit the Seattle docks at a canter, him headed for the postal telegraph, me for a fruitstand. I bought a dollar's worth of everything, from crackerjack to cantaloupe, reserving the local option of eatin' it there in whole or in part, and returning for more. First fresh fruit in three years. I reckon my proudest hour come when I found, beyond peradventure, that I hadn't forgot the 'Gregory Grind.' What? 'Gregory Grind' consists of feeding rough-hewed slabs of watermelon into your sou' sou'east corner and squirting a stream of seeds out from the other cardinal points, without stopping or strangling.

"I et and et, and then wallered up to the hotel, sweatin' a different kind of fruit juice from every pore. Not wishing to play any favorites, I'd picked up a basket of tomatoes, a gunnysack of pineapples, and a peck of green plums on the way. Them plums does the business. I'd orter let bad enough alone. They was nonunion, and I begin having trouble with my inside help. Morrow turned in a hurry-call for the Red Cross, two medical colleges, and the Society of Psycholic Research. Between 'em they diagnosed me as containing everything from 'housemaid's knee' to homesickness of the vital organs, but I know, I swallered a plum pit, and it sprouted.

"Next day, when I come out of it, Justus had heard from Denver. His wife had been gone a year, destination unknown. Somebody thought she went to California, so, two days later, we registered at the Palace, and the Frisco police began dreaming of five thousand dollar rewards.

"It was no use, though. One day I met Struthers on Market street, and he was scared stiff to hear that Morrow was in town. It seems he was night editor of one of the big dalies.

"'Do you know where the girl is?' says I.

"'Yes, she's in New York,' he answers, looking queer, so I hurried back to the hotel.

"As I was explaining to Morrow a woman passed us in the hall with a little boy. In the dimness the lad mistook Justus.

"'O, papa, papa!' he yells, and grabs him by the knees, laughing and kicking.

"'Ah-h!' my pardner sighs, hoarse as a raven, and quicker'n light he snatched the little shaver to him; then, seeing his mistake, dropped him rough. His face went gray again, and he got wabbly at the hinges, so I helped him into the parlor. He had that hungry, Yukon look, and breathed like he was wounded.

"'You come with me,' says I, 'and get your mind off of things. The Eastern Limited don't leave till midnight. Us to the theater!'

"It was a swell tepee, all right. Variety house, with moving pictures, and actorbats, and two-ton soubrettes with Barrios diamonds and hand painted socks.

"First good show I'd seen in three years, and naturally humor broke out all over me. When joy spreads its wings in my vitals I sound like a boy with a stick running past a picket fence. Not so Morrow. He slopped over the sides of his seat like he'd been spilled into the house.

"Right after the sea lions the orchestra spicled some teetery music, and out floats a woman slim and graceful as an antelope. She had a big pay dump of brown hair piled up on her hurricane deck, with eyes that snapped and crinkled at the corners. She single-footed in like a derby colt, and the somnambulists in the front row began to show cause. Something about her startled me, so I nudged the kid, but he was chin deep in the plush, with his eyes closed. I marked how drawed and haggard he looked; and then, of a sudden, he raised half on his feet. The girl had begun to sing. Her voice was rich and low, and full of deep, still places, like a mountain stream. But Morrow! He sunk his fingers into me, and leaned for'rad, starin' as though paradise had opened for him, while the sweat on his face shone like diamond chips.

"It was the girl of the locket, all right, on the stage again—in vaudeville.

"Her song bubbled along, rippling over sandy, sunlit gravel bars and slidin' out through shady trout pools beneath the cool alder thickets, and all the time my pardner sat burning his soul in his eyes, his breath achin' out through his throat. Incidental, his digits was knuckle deep into the muscular tissues of William P., the gent to the right.

"When she quit I had to jam his back.

"For an encore she sang a reg'lar American song with music to it. When she reached the chorus she stopped. Then away up in the balcony sounded the tiny treble of a boy's soprano, sweet as the ring of silver. The audience turned, to a man, and we seen, perched among the newsboys, the littlest, golden haired youngster, 'bout the size of your thumb, his eyes glued to the face of his mother on the stage below, pourin' out his lark song, serious and frightened. Twice he done it, while by main strn'th I held his father to the enjoyments of a two dollar orchestra chair.

"'Let us in,' we says, three minutes later, to the stranger at the stage door, but he looked upon us with unwelcome, like the seven-headed hydrant of holy writ.

"'It's agin the rules,' he says. 'You kin wait in the alley with the other Johnnies.'

"I ain't acclimated to the cold disfavor of a stage door, never having soubretted along the bird and bottle route. I was for the layin' on of hands. Moreover, I didn't like the company we was in; 'Johnnies,' by designation of the Irish terrier at the wicket. They smoked ready made cigarets, and some of 'em must have measured full eight inches acrost the chest.

"'Let us stroll gently but firmly into, over, and past the remains of this party to the missus,' says I, but Morrow got seized with the shakes, of a sudden.

"'No, no. We'll wait here.'

"At last she come out, steppin' high. When she moved she rustled and rattled like she wore sandpaper at the ankles.

"Say, she was royal! She carried the youngster in her arms, sound asleep, and it wasn't till she stepped under the gaslight that she seen us.

"'O!' she cried, and went white as the lace of her cloak. Then she hugged the kiddy clost to her, standing straight and queenly, her eyes ablaze, her lips moist, and red, and scornful.

"God, she was grand—but him? He looked like a barnacle.

"'Olive!' says he, bull-froggy, and that's all. Just quit like a dog, and ate her up by long distance eyesight. Lord! Nobody would have knowed him for the same man that called the crookedest gamblers on the Yukon and bolted newspaper men raw. He had ingrowing language. It oozed out through his pores till he dreened like a harvest hand.

Few Writers Since Jack London Can Glimpse the Far North as Rex Beach Does. This Story Is One of His Klondyke Classics.

"MOST of all the old quotations need fixing," said Joyce in tones forbidding dispute. "For instance, the guy that alluded to marriages germinating in heaven certainly got off on the wrong foot. He meant pardnerships. The same works ain't got capacity for both, no more'n you can build a split second stopwatch in a stone quarry. No, sir! A true pardnership is the sanctifiedest relation that grows, is, and has its beans, while any two folks of opposite sect can marry and peg the game out some way. Of course, all pardnerships ain't divine. To every one that's heaven borned there's a thousand made in—. There goes them cussed dogs again!"

He dove abruptly at the tent flap, disappearing like a palmed coin, while our canvas structure reeled drunkenly at his impact. The sounds of strife without rose shrilly into blended agony, and the yelps of Keno melted away down the gulch in a rapid and rabid diminuendo.

Inasmuch as I had just packed out from camp in a loose pair of rubber boots, and was nursing two gall blisters, I did not feel called upon to emulate this energy of arbitration, particularly in bare feet.

"That black malamoot is a walking delegate for strife," he remarked, returning. "Sometime I'll lose my temper—and that's the kind of pardners me and Justus Morrow was."

Never more do I interrupt the allegory of my mate, no matter how startling its structure. He adventures orally when and in the manner the spirit calls, without rote, form, or tone production. Therefore I kicked my blistered heels in the air and grunted aimless encouragement.

"I was prospectin' a claim on Caribou creek, and had her punched as full of holes as a sponge cake, when the necessity of a change appealed to me. I was out of everything more nourishing than hope and one slab of pay streaked bacon, when two tenderfeet 'mushed' up the gulch, and invited themselves into my cabin to watch me pan. It's the simplest thing known to science to salt a tenderfoot, so I didn't have no trouble in selling out for three thousand dollars.

"You see, they couldn't kick, 'cause some of us 'old timers' was bound to get their money anyhow—just a question of time; and their inexperience was cheap at the price. Also, they was real nice boys, and I hated to see 'em fall amongst them crooks at Dawson. It was a short horned triumph, though. Like the Dead sea biscuits of Scripture, it turned to ashes in my mouth. It wasn't three days later that they struck it; right in my last shaft, within a foot of where I quit diggin'. They rooked out fifty ounces first day. When the news filtered to me, of course, I never made no holler. I couldn't—that is, honestly—but I bought a six hundred dollar grubstake, loaded it aboard a dory, and—having instructed the trader regarding the disposition of my mortal, drunken remains, I fanned through that camp like a prairie fire shot in the sirloin with a hot wind.

"Of course, it wasn't such a big spree; nothing gaudy or Swedelike; but them that should know claimed it was a model of refinement. Yes, I have got many encomiums on its general proportions and artistic finish. One hundred dollars an hour for twenty-four hours, all in red licker, confined to and in me and my choicest sympathizers. I reckon all our booze combined would have made a fair sluicehead. Anyhow, I woke up considerable farther down the dim vistas of time and about the same distance down the Yukon, in the bottom of my dory, seekin' new fields at six miles an hour. The trader had follered my last will and testament scrupulous, even to coverin' up my legs.

"That's how I drifted into Rampart City and Justus Morrow.

"This here town was the same as any new camp; a mile long and eighteen inches wide, consisting of saloons, dance halls, saloons, trading posts, saloons, places to get licker, and saloons. Might not have been so many dance halls and trading posts as I've mentioned, and a few more saloons.

"I dropped into a joint called The Reception, and who'd I see playing 'bank' but 'Single Out' Wilmer, the worst gambler on the whole river. Mounted police had him on the woodpile in Dawson, then tied a can on him. At the same table was a nice, tender Philadelphia squab, 'bout fryin' size, and while I was watching Wilmer pulls down a bet belonging to it. That's an old game.

"'Pardon me," says the broiler, 'you have my checks.'

"'What'? growls 'Single Out'; 'I knowed this game before you quit nursin', Bright Eyes. I can protect my own bets.'

"'That's right,' chimes the dealer, who I seen was 'Curly' Budd, Wilmer's pardner.

"'Lord!' thinks I, 'there's a pair to draw to.'

"'Do you really think you had ought to play this? It's a man's game,' says Wilmer nasty.

"I expected to see the youngster dog it. Nothin' of the kind.

"'That's my bet!' he says again, and I noticed something dry in his voice, like the rustle of silk.

"Single Out just looks black and snarls at the dealer.

"'Turn the cards!'

"O, very well,' says the chechako, talking like a little girl.

"Somebody snickered and, thinks I, 'there's sprightly doin's hereabouts. I'll tarry a while and see 'em singe the fowl. I like the smell of burning pin feathers; it clears my head.'

"Over in the far corner was another animal in knee panties, riggin' up one of these flashlight, snappy-shot, photograft layouts. I found afterwards that he done it for a living; didn't work none, just strayed around as correspondent for an English newspaper syndicate, taking pictures and writing story things. I didn't pay much attention to him hiding under his black cloth, 'cause the faro table was full of bets, and it's hard to follow the play. Well, bye-and-bye Wilmer shifted another stack belonging to the easterner.

"The lad never begged his pardon nor nothin'. His fist just shot out and landed on the nigh corner of Wilmer's jaw, clean and fair, and 'Single Out' done as pretty a headspin as I ever see—considering that it was executed in a cuspidor. 'Twas my first insight into the amenities of football. I'd like to see a whole game of it. They say it lasts an hour and a half. Of all the cordial, why-how-do-you-do mule kicks handed down in rhyme and story, that wallop was the adopted daddy.

"When he struck I took the end of the bar like a steeplechaser, for I seen 'Curly' grab at the drawer, and I have aversions to witnessing gun plays from the front end. The tenderfoot riz up in his chair, and snatchin' a stack of reds in his off mit, dashed 'em into 'Curly's' face just as he pulled trigger. It spoiled his aim, and the boy was on to him like a mountain lion, follerin' over the table, along the line of least resistance.

"It was like takin' a candy sucker from a baby. 'Curly' let go of that 'six' like he was plumb tired of it, and the kid welted him over the ear just oncet. Then he turned on the room; and right there my heart went out to him. He took in the lineup at a sweep of his lamps:

"'Any of you gentlemen got ideas on the subject?' he says, and his eyes danced like waves in the sunshine.

"It was all that finished and genteel that I speaks up without thinkin', 'You for me, pardner!'

"Just as I said it there came a swish and flash as if a kag of black powder had changed its state of bein'. I s'pose everybody yelled and dodged except the picture man. He says, 'Thank you, gents; very pretty tableau.'

"It was the first flashlight I ever see, and all I recall now is a panorama of starin' eyeballs and gaping mouths. When it seen it wasn't torpedoed, the population begin crawlin' out from under chairs and tables. Men hopped out like toads in a rain.

"I crossed the boy's trail later that evening; found him watchin' a dance at the Gold Belt. The photographter was there, too, and when he'd got his doghouse fixed:

"'Everybody take pardners, and whoop her up. I want this picture for the Weekly. Get busy, you, there!' We all joined in to help things; the orchestra hit the rough spots, and we went highfalutin' down the center, to show the English race how our joy pained us, and that life in the Klondyke had the Newport whirl looking like society in a Siwash village. He got another good picture.

"Inside of a week Morrow and I had joined up. We leased a claim and had our cabin done, waiting for snow to fall so's to sled our grub out to the creek. He took to me like I did to him, and he was an educated kid, too. Somehow, though, it hadn't gone to his head, leaving his hands useless, like knowledge usually does.

"One day, just before the last boat pulled down river, Mr. Struthers, the picture man, came to us—R. Alonzo Struthers of London and Frisco, he was—and showin' us a picture, he says:

"'Ain't that great? Sunday supplements! Full page! Big display, eh?'

"It sure was. 'Bout 9x9, and showing every detail of the Reception saloon. There was 'Single Out' analyzing the cuspidor and 'Curly' dozin', as contorted and well done as a pretzel. There was the crowd hiding in the corners, and behind the faro table stood the kid, one hand among the scattered chips and cards, the other dominating the layout with 'Curly's' 'six.' It couldn't have looked more natural if we'd posed for it. It was a bully likeness, I thought, too, till I seen myself glaring over the bar. All that showed of William P. Joyce, bachelor of some arts and plenty of science, late of Dawson, was the white of his eyes. And talkin' of white—say, I looked like I had washing hung out. Seemed like the draft had riz my hair up, too.

"'Nothin' like it ever seen,' continues Struthers. 'I'll call it "The Winning Card," or "At Bay," or something like that. Feature it as a typical Klondyke card game. I'll give you a two page write-up. Why, it's the greatest thing I ever did!'

"'I'm sorry,' says Morrow thoughtful, 'but you mustn't run it.'

"'What!' say he, and I thinks, 'O, Lord, there goes my only show to get perpetufied in ink.'

"'I can't let you use it. My wife might see it.'

"'Your wife!' says I. 'Are you married, pardner?'

"'Yes, I'm married,' and his voice sounded queer. 'I've got a boy—too, see.'

"He took a locket from his flannel shirt and opened it. A curly headed, dimpled little youngster laughed out at me.

"'Well, I'm d——!' then I took off my hat, for in the other side was a woman—and, gentlemen, she was a woman! When I seen her it made me feel blushy and ashamed. Gee! She was a stunner. I just stared at her till Struthers looked over my shoulder and says, excited:

"'Why, it's Olive Troop, the singer!'

"'Not any more,' says Morrow smiling.

"'O! So you're the fellow she gave up her art for? I knew her on the stage.'

"Something way deep down in the man grated on me, but the kid was lookin' at the picture and never noticed, while hunger peered from his face.

"'You can't blame me,' he says finally. 'She'd worry to death if she saw that picture. The likeness is too good. You might substitute another face on my shoulders; that can be done, can't it?'

"'Why, sure; dead easy, but I'll not run it at all if you feel that way,' says the artist.

"'Then,' Morrow resumes, 'you'll be in Denver this fall, Struthers, eh? Well, I want you to take a letter to her. She'll be glad to see an old friend like you, and to hear from me. Tell her I'm well and happy, and that I'll make a fortune, sure. Tell her, too, that there won't be any mail out of here till spring.'

"Now, I don't claim no second sight in the matter of female features; I ain't had no coachin'; not even as much as the ordinary, being raised on a bottle, but I've studied the onery imprints of men's thoughts, over green tables and gun bar'ls, till I can about guess whether they've drawed four aces or an invite to a funeral. I got another flash from that man I didn't like, though his words were hearty. He left soon after, on the last boat.

"Soon as ever the ground froze we began to sink. In those days steam thawers wasn't dreamed of, so we slid wood down from the hills, and burned the ground with fires. It's slow work, and we didn't catch bedrock till December, but when we did we struck it right. Four feet of 10 cent dirt was what she averaged. Big? Well, I wonder! It near drove Morrow crazy.

"'Billy, old boy, this means I'll see her next summer!'

"Whenever he mentioned her name he spoke like a man in church or out of breath. Somehow it made me feel like takin' off my cap—40 below at that, and my ears freeze terrible willing since that winter on the Porcupine.

"That evening, when I wasn't looking, he sneaked the locket out of his shirt and stared at it, famished. Then he kissed it, if you might rehabilitate such a scandalous, hold-fast-for-the-corner performance by that name.

"'I must let her know right away,' says he. 'How can I do it?'

"'We can hire a messenger, and send him to Dawson,' says I. 'Everybody in camp will pay five dollars a letter, and he can bring back the outside mail. They have monthly service from there to the coast. He'll make the trip in ninety days, so you'll get news from home by the first of March. Windy Jim will go. He'd leave a good job and a warm camp any time to hit the trail. Just hitch up the dogs, crack a whip, and yell "Mush on!" and he'll get the snowshoe itch and water at the mouth for hardship.'

"Not being house broke and tame myself, I ain't authority on the joys of getting mail from home, but, next to it, I judge, comes writing to your family. Anyhow, the boy shined up like new money, and there was from one to four million pages in his hurried note. I don't mean to say that he was grouchy at any time. No, sir! He was the nickel plated sunbeam of the whole creek. Why, I've knowed him to do the cooking for two weeks at a stretch and never kick—and wash the dishes, too. Underneath all of his sunshine, though, I saw hints of an awful, aching, devilish starvation. It made me near hate the woman that caused it.

"He was a wise one, too. I've seen him stirring dogfeed with one hand and spouting 'Gray's Elegy' with the other. I picked up a heap of knowledge from him, for he had American history pat. One story I liked particular was concerning the origin of placer mining in this country, about a Greaser, Jason Somebody, who got the gold fever and grubstaked a mob he called the Augerknots—carpenters, I judge, from the mess they made of it. They chartered a schooner and prospected along Asy Miner, wherever that is. I never seen any boys from there, but the formation was wrong, like Texas, probably, 'cause they sort of drifted into the sheep business. Of course, that was a long ways back, before the '49 rush, but the way he told it was great.

"Well, two weeks after Windy left we worked out of that rich spot and drifted into barren ground. Instead of a fortune, we'd sunk onto the only yellow spot in the whole claim. We cross cut in three places, and never raised a color, but we kept gophering around till March, in hopes.

"'Why did I write that letter?' he asked one day. 'I'd give anything to stop it before it gets out. Think of her disappointment when she hears I'm broke!'

"'Nobody can't look into the ground,' says I. 'I don't mind losin' out myself, for I've done it for twenty years, and I sort of like it now, but I'm sorry for the girl.'

"'It means another whole season,' he says. 'I wanted to see them this summer, or bring them in next fall.'

"'Sufferin' sluice boxes! Are you plumb daffy? Bring a woman into the Yukon—and a little baby.'

"'She'd follow me anywhere. She's awful proud; proud as a Kentucky girl can be, and those people would make your uncle Lucifer look like a cringing cripple, but she'd live in an Indian hut with me.'

"'Sure! And follerin' out the simile, nobody but a Siwash would let her. If she don't like some other feller better while you're gone, what're you scared about?'

"He never answered, just looked at me pityfyin', as much as to say 'Well, you poor, drivelin', old polyp!'

"One day Denny, the squawman, drove up the creek.

"'Windy Jim is back with the mail,' says he, and we hit for camp on the run. Only she never thinks of as heroisms at all—just duty to sick sisters and grumpy father."

The SPLENDID CHANCE

"Is it your idea that I am to soften the mishaps of life to deprived ladies who don't know art from artificial by letting them make free with my studio?"

She shook her yellow head at him in a kind of despair. "It's only that it would have been so kind of you. And even if you didn't you might have been politer to them—softened it—made excuses."

"I don't soften things and I don't make excuses," he returned indignantly. "That's not in my character. And if I didn't hold my studio and my time sacred there would come nothing from them worth the intrusive curiosity of lady teachers or any one else."

"I know—but these were my friends," she murmured with a shamelessly feminine change of front. "And if I hadn't thought them deserving of your forbearance I wouldn't have——"

"O Lord, Harry!" He ran his fingers through his hair with a gesture of fierce exasperation. "Well, see here—here's the key to this place. I'm going out. You can bring them here at your freedom and let them revel in impressions——" He flung his arms toward an attending circle of unfinished models. "Only they can't peep at that," he prohibited, indicating the model for his fountain under a shrouding cloth.

"But it was you that was the magnet——"

"The magnet—damn! I beg your pardon—no, I don't either. You deserved worse than that. But if you've really set your heart on pouring that crew in here, on me, why—why"—again that distraught gesture through his rumpled hair—"why you get them back here again and I'll let them in. Only don't ask me to explain my 'revelation of a Prophet,'" he snorted.

She met his look with a face all gleams of laughing triumph. "Now you are nice! But it's too late for you to suffer for it, for they are off to an unknown restaurant, and they are leaving in a rush tomorrow. Besides, I explained you."

"Explained me?"

She nodded, a teasing little smile about her lips. "I hinted mystery—beneath the words of truth. I said that you were working and—and undoubtedly—there was nothing here that you wanted any one to see. Your own words, you see. And the dears guessed—a model!"

"A model?" He looked but faintly enlightened. Then a wry grin flickered across his face.

"You should have seen their slant looks at the door as they passed. And they told me they quite understood!"

"And felt they were treading near to bacchanalian secrets?" He chuckled suddenly and Katherine wondered what made her so surprised and then recalled that it was the first recognizable sound of mirth she had heard from him in all these weeks of their increasing friendship. He was not a gloomy man, though taciturn to strangers, dry and unsocial, but never, even with little Peggy, had she heard him laugh.

She was still thinking about that and fitting it into her scheme of his tragedy when he startled her by marching up to her, his hands deep in his pockets, his dark head thrust forward with an air of active beligerency.

"It's all very well for you to preach to me—you have a sweet missionary spirit as no one knows better than my surly self," he said dryly, "but I have a few words of warning to say to you. It's all very 'nice' to be agreeable to worthy travelers and deprived ladies—but there are plenty of other people's time for them to waste. If you are ever going to do anything in the world and bring a harvest out of the seed that's in you, there's just one way—do it."

He drew a hand out of his pocket and shook it at her impressively. "Give yourself to it, body and soul. Keep the distractions down to the thinnest margin of recreation. Save your strength and your time for your work. That's the one condition of doing your best—and making your best better."

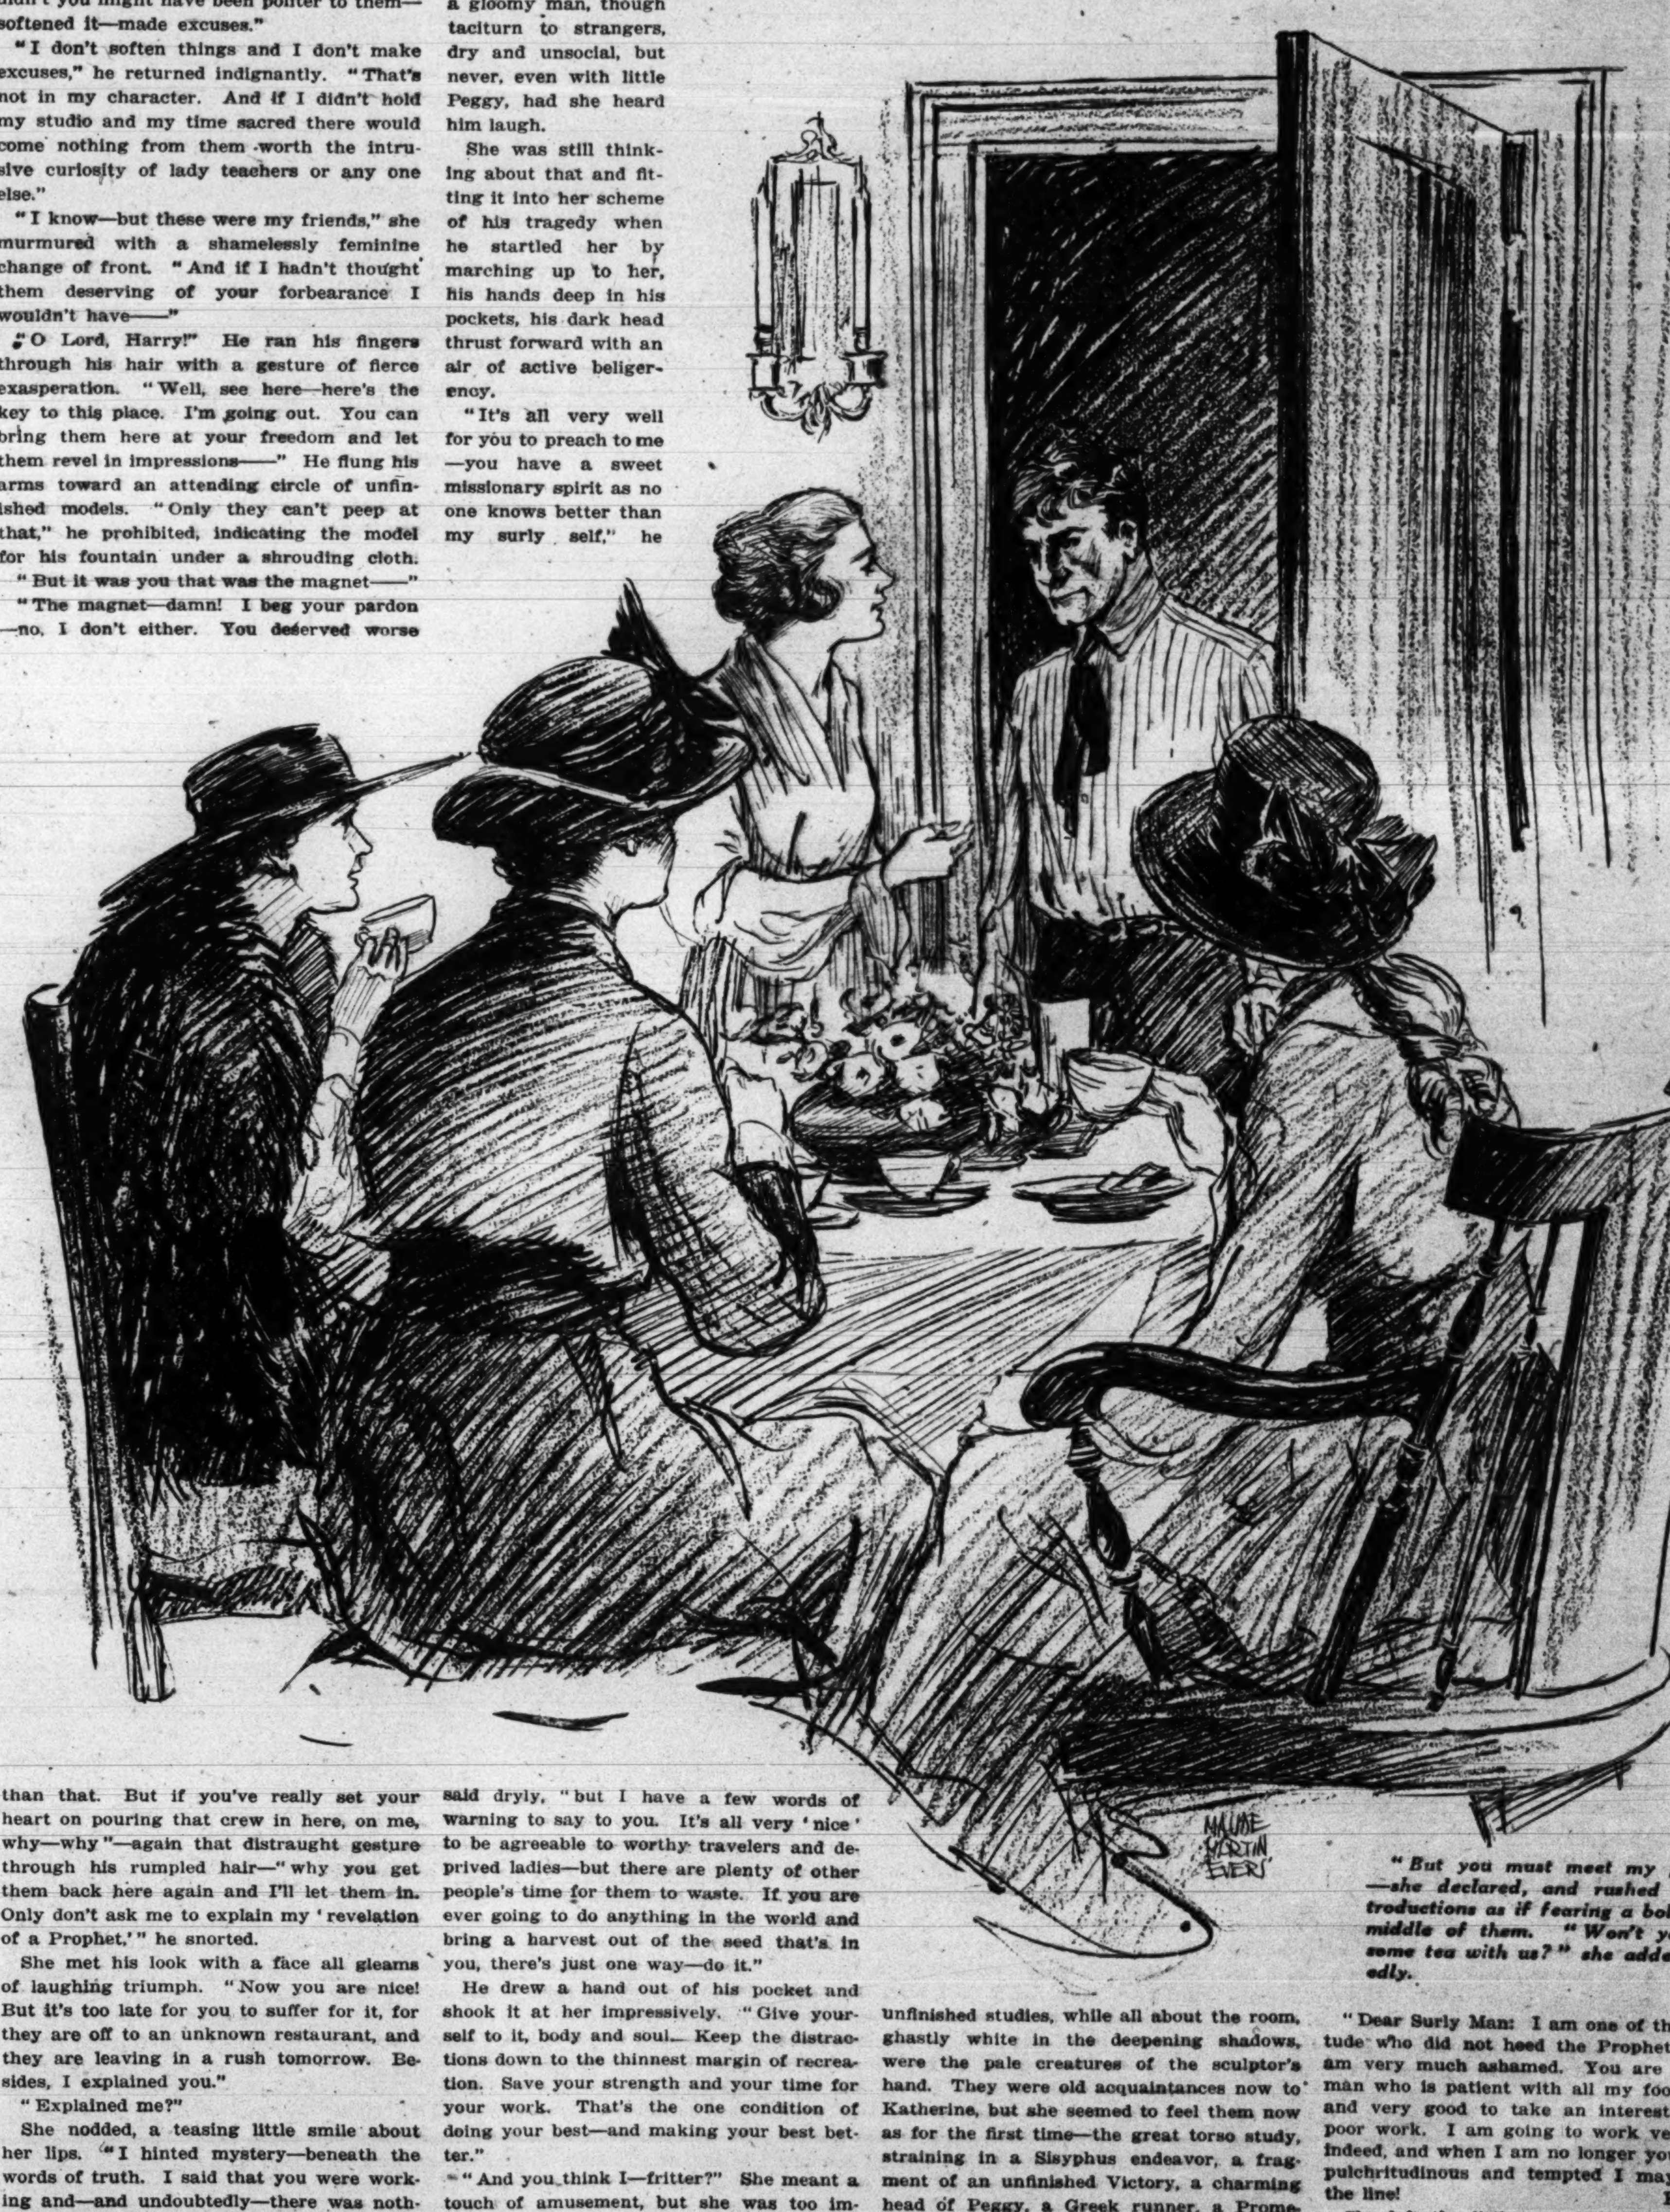
"And you think I—fritter?" She meant a touch of amusement, but she was too impressed by his force.

"Not much—yet," he acknowledged grimly. "It's natural—that makes it almost inevitable. The unnatural and amazing thing would be to have a girl of your age and your"—he hesitated, then shading his words with irony—"your degree of pulchritude consecrate herself to serious and creditable achievement. You started in well at first. Now you're letting things get hold of you."

One hour afterward she came downstairs again. It was little Peggy who answered her knock. MacNare was out.

By one of the windows the model of his fountain stood beneath the shrouding cloth and one or two other cloths covered certain unfinished studies, while all about the room, ghastly white in the deepening shadows, were the pale creatures of the sculptor's hand. They were old acquaintances now to Katherine, but she seemed to feel them now as for the first time—the great torso study, straining in a Sisyphus endeavor, a fragment of an unfinished Victory, a charming head of Peggy, a Greek runner, a Prometheus, a horseshoer, and a dozen other studies of man and beast.

The girl's eyes went from one to the other, then lingered upon the study for the Prophet. The impressiveness of the great marble at the salon was not in the model, but there was power and passion even in the smaller clay of the gaunt and fiery Prophet, appealing with outflung hands and vision touched lips to the multitude who turned from him in cynical incredulity, in ribald mockery, in dull oblivion and gay pursuits. As she gazed a great humility of spirit came upon her. She found a pencil and paper and wrote upon the edge of a clay, moist table:



"But you must meet my guests," —she declared, and rushed the introductions as if fearing a bolt in the middle of them. "Won't you take some tea with us?" she added wickedly.

"Dear Surly Man: I am one of the multitude who did not heed the Prophet—and I am very much ashamed. You are a great man who is patient with all my foolishness and very good to take an interest in my poor work. I am going to work very hard indeed, and when I am no longer young and pulchritudinous and tempted I may be on the line! K. K."

She left the little note on his plate and fled.

And Peggy, devotedly eyeing her Robert father over the strawberries, wondered why he pocketed that note so carefully and then took it out and tore it into a hundred pieces.

SLICE OF A CHAMPION

By ROBERT LEE

He Played a Wretched Game, But It Didn't Matter.

NOW, if you ever get into the nineteenth hole at Aismuir—wait a minute.

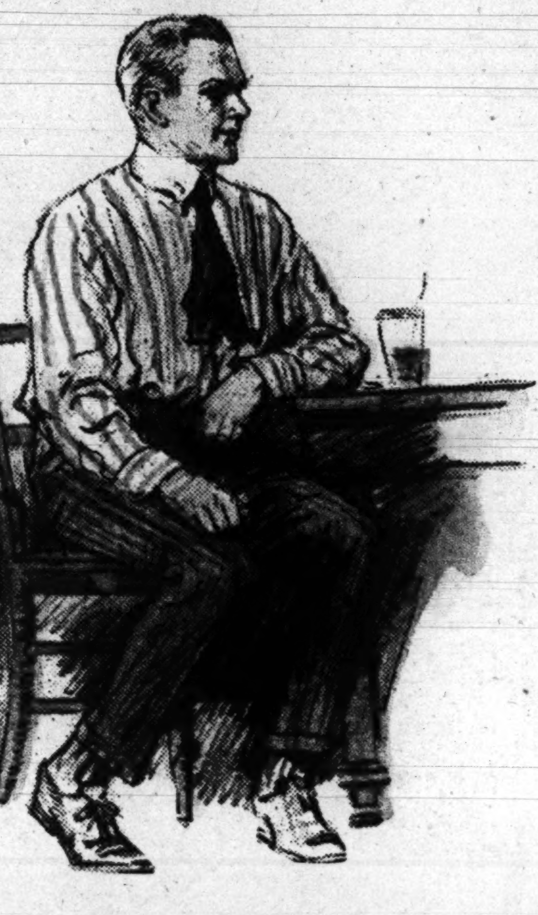
Old Colin MacKay played a very considerable game of golf; so considerable that while he openly denounced gambling as vicious and degrading, he took it as a matter of club tradition to send visiting small town champions home in an impoverished and bankrupt state. He was a grim, gray man of about 50, and he certainly could swing a mean mashie. But the visiting cup fiends always seemed to single him out for a good thing. He had a way about him; a way of making a stranger feel that he probably played too good a game for an old man to go up against. Then he would permit himself to be inveigled; anything from a ball a hole on up to the zenith; and he always brought a grieved and lamenting stranger back into the nineteenth with him. One Scotch—always one, and never two—would loosen his tongue just perceptibly. He would then release, as they say in the Associated Press, a couple of thousand words about his golf history and his golf collections.

MacKay was of Inverness. I think the MacKay clan laid the foundation of that borough, spread the soil upon it, and then landscaped it with an eye to a prodigious and everlasting golf course. Old Colin came to America when a mere boy. He must have started saving 99 cents on the dollar right off the bat and worrying himself to death about squandering the other cent, because when he was 40 he had an annual income that would trip an antelope. He was now able to devote himself to the traditions of the MacKays; that was golf. Now, just a minute; let me interrupt myself long enough to say that old Colin also was devoted to one of the most wonderful household decorations that ever sprung from Scottish blood. You're right—her name was Sue. Want me to describe her? No? Well, it isn't necessary—you've read about them; gold, sunshine, radiance, blue of the summer seas, and all that. There you have it; old Colin, Sue, golf; that was the trinity, if it isn't sacrilegious to put it that way.

MacKay took to golf like a Pittsburgh millionaire cultivating a chorus girl who doesn't know her alphabet. Golf came natural to him, like breakfast or the hives. One may dispense with these things for forty years, and yet, when one achieves them it is not so extraordinary. That was because the MacKays for many centuries had been a golfing tribe. The chances are when the flood subsided and Noah projected his head from a window of the ark, he was astonished to perceive a strange species of amphibian walloping a small, white pellet about on the sands of Scotland; these were the earliest MacKays—playing golf in their diving suits, regardless of the flood and all its dangers. Through the years of his labor, McKay had longed for the sport of his fathers; but it was denied him. In Scotland one may slip into one's breeks of a crisp morning, step out the back door, tee off; Scotland being a continuous golf course, one may golf himself from Northumberland to the Orkney islands. Some of the drives are long, but what matter when every other hole is the nineteenth? But in America MacKay soon discovered that golf comprises the two ends of the meal of life; breakfast food for the young, and dessert for the aged. The young play it before they learn to work; the old when they have learned not to. Now, MacKay, having reached the age of indiscretion, came forth with the ancient MacKay clubs as if he were bearing the militant Roman fasces, and after a couple of swings to accommodate muscles which had been at rest since the generation just extinct, cut loose with a game that gave us all the blind staggers.

He was first on the course and the last off. He simply folded himself into the landscape like a long lost son who had just returned to the maternal embrace. It wasn't long before he bought a piece of acreage adjoining the club grounds and made a country estate of it. Now he was happy with his golf and his Sue. And I suppose she wasn't happy. Permit me to divert; I must take occasion here to introduce another character.

Name was Charlie Prince; and if I had been awarded the contract for picking out a new name for him I'd have forfeited my bond; Prince fit him like a bib. He was young, smiling, quiet, and efficient. He played a fair game of golf until the day he first saw Sue MacKay; she drove over with old Colin. After that he couldn't have hit a waste basket with a bedstead. And it was just his luck that a few days later old Colin matched him for a twosome tilt. Dear me! what rage surged within the bosom of the MacKay when he discovered Prince's sad lack of form. Charlie's ball seemed to be controlled by the natural perversity of inanimate things. The MacKay estate lay somewhat to the northwest of the club grounds, and where the grounds joined there was a bit of a maple grove. And you may believe it or not, but every ball Charlie hit went straight in the direction of MacKay's grove; seemed to be drawn there by some strange and ungovernable instinct. Even when the fairway stretched straight to the southwest, in exactly the opposite direction from the home of Sue MacKay, Charlie's ball inevitably would fetch a sort of a corkscrew out-drop and curve around as if framing up an excuse for going in the direction of MacKay's.



"His name was Charlie Prince."

Presently old Colin began to look suspiciously at Charlie. Then he tried to edge over close to him to catch a whiff of his breath. He couldn't believe that any sober man could play such a downright awful game. You see, while Colin MacKay had been kept out of his own for forty years it was like being heir to the throne; he had all the essentials of a monarch and needed only the crown. And now that he wore it he regarded his golf kingdom as a place too sacred to be trampled by rank amateurs. How they ever got around the course without old Colin resorting to manslaughter is more than I can conjecture. But even then MacKay bestowed upon Charlie all the rites and trimmings; this was the collection and the two thousand word release which came with the one Scotch.

The truth is, Charlie was so head over heels in love with Sue MacKay he was dizzy. They tell us the sixth sense is that of direction; well, it isn't. It consists in knowing whether you are an ace or a deuce with the girl's old man. If it had been the sense of direction Charlie wouldn't even have needed a score card. But he had discovered at the first tee that he or any other young cutup who came hanging around Sue MacKay had about as much chance as a blind man at a movie show. But he was a corking good listener, and that was all MacKay needed after that first and only Scotch in the nineteenth at Aismuir.

MacKay used to keep his collection of balls and clubs at home; but he couldn't talk about them there with the best effect. In the first place there weren't enough strangers and then old Colin found that after about five hundred words of his oration the audience would be gaping at Sue while he would be talking to himself. So he brought the collection to the club. Each day after he had taken a stranger over the course and properly drubbed him into silence he would fetch him up alongside the glass case containing the collection and hold forth substantially as follows:

"These, as you might say, are the tools of the clan MacKay. They are the mute evidences of generations of skill upon the links. They have been handed down from father to son, and they never have been disgraced."

Then he would explode with a prodigious "har-r-rumph," and look around to see if any one doubted him. The ayes having it, he would take up each club and give it a swift, masterful paragraph, and then pass on to the next. It was a handy collection, too. He had some funny old shinny sticks they played with back there in the cenozoic time and from them you could trace the evolution of the golf club down to where it began to get on people's nerves. He showed Charlie Prince the grandfather of all the golf balls.

"This is one of the earliest of which we have any actual record," he said. "It is made of home tanned leather, hand sewed, and is stuffed with feathers. It might even do for some of the players nowadays," he said with a broad smile at Charlie. It went right over Charlie's head He was thinking of Sue and the sunshine and gold and all that.

Then MacKay skipped a few centuries and discoursed on the difference between the old timers and the present day balls with their water cores, and acid cores, and rubber cores. Charlie kept on smiling a quiet, whimsical smile, and old Colin might just as well have been directing his remarks to a bust of Sophocles.

"This," said MacKay, taking out still another ball, "illustrates the era of the modern golf ball. It is made of gutta percha."

Charlie looked at it and nodded absently. The old man gazed with a certain fondness upon the little, battered sphere and then he sighed.

"This one," he said, with an unexpected tenderness, "is worth the history of them all. Do you want to hear it?"

Charlie, with a politeness that was all his own, begged him to continue. Then he sat looking at the ball as MacKay turned it over and over in his hand. It was sure enough a quaint old relic of the royal game. And most peculiar of all was a small round hole, cut almost through the center of it. This aroused a mild curiosity in Charlie.

"What kind of an accident cut that hole?" he asked.

"It wasn't an accident," said old Colin. "It was the most providential bit of premeditation on record. O, that was better than twenty-five years ago. I was a young man then, and in the evenings I was calling at the home of a certain young woman. My mind and heart were set on her, but her parents were not set on me, for I was young and had my fortune to make, and besides there were others more desirable from their point of view.

"Twenty-five years ago I wasn't playing golf; it was too expensive for a young fellow plugging along in a steel mill; but I always have known the game and most of the things in this collection have been handed down in my own family. It is peculiar, isn't it, that this old gutta percha ball, of a comparatively modern make, should cut the greatest figure in the history of the cabinet?"

Well, you know you can hear a thing too often; so it wasn't long before old Colin and Charlie were left to themselves, or rather Charlie was left to his fate; the remainder of the nineteenth hole champions backed off and began their own pastime of seeing who could alibi the loudest for a rotten score. MacKay again turned the gutta percha ball reminiscently in his fingers.

"The young woman's father," he continued, "played a corking game of golf. I suppose if I had been able to go around with him instead of being just a golfless mill hand, I might have earned a welcome. The young woman played, too. But that didn't matter so much; my welcome with her was solid enough. I mustered enough courage to speak for her hand and the old gentleman flew into a rage; it was out of the question; I was an audacious young cub. It was quite a setback, and it made me think pretty hard. Finally we decided to elope. But we must have decided upon it so the world could hear, because the old gentleman got wind of it and the result was solitary confinement for the young woman, save for an evening walk and the constant company of a companion. That was very complicating."

Old Colin permitted a sly little smile to creep over his canny Scotch features, and Charlie saw written there: "I am a wise old bird. Beware!"

"One evening," resumed MacKay, "I was walking about, and very down-hearted I was, too. I was trying to come to a solution of the problem. I suppose it was some subconscious urging that sent me into the street where the young woman lived. It was one of those marble finished apartment buildings, and her father's apartment was on the third floor. When I came to it I walked very slowly. I suppose it was to absorb the atmosphere of her neighborhood. I was feeling pretty blue, I can tell you, and thinking as hard as ever I could, when something struck me on the shoulder and bounded to the street.

"At first I thought it might have been a bit of window fernery that fell. And then I decided it wasn't. I walked hastily to the curbing and picked it up. Do you know what? Well, it was this very golf ball which I now hold in my hand. I put it in my pocket and hurried out of the neighborhood. When I came to a safe light I took out my golf ball and examined it. There was a hole cut in it, just as you see it here. And in the hole was a bit of paper, sort of plugging the hole shut. I was rather excited then, and I began picking at the paper. I soon discovered I must be careful, for there was writing on it. In a jiffy I had the bit of paper spread before me. It said:

"'At 9, tonight!'

"And it was in her writing. At 9 I was loitering near that marble trimmed apartment building. I saw her come out with another young woman. They went away, but in a minute she came back—alone; she had given her companion the slip."

"Yes?" said Charlie, with the well known rising inflection which asks for more. Old Colin rose and laid the gutta percha ball back in its case.

"Huh?" he said, absently. "O, that's all. Happily ever after. And I have always treasured that ball. Time to go home. Good-night."

During the remainder of the evening Charlie didn't seem to have pep enough even to offer an alibi for his atrocious playing of the afternoon.

Now, Charlie never had made the club his life work, like some of the boys who come early and stay late. He was what you might call a good member. He played often enough to keep the geography of the place in his mind, but not enough so he could be called the club dictograph. You know these club dictographs?—sit around all day and dish dirt and wait for live ones? Well, all of a sudden Charlie played golf like a white wing; he wasn't even good company, because he didn't show interest when you made a championship shot. The truth was, he was in love with Sue MacKay and it was interfering with his entire administrative entity, as they say in Washington. First a few of his cronies knew about it, then the whole club made it the common gossip, and, finally, old Colin MacKay tumbled so hard it made him blink for several minutes.

The funny part of it was that old Colin discovered this low and villainous plot against his daughter just about the time he played his second and final game with Charlie. It didn't seem possible, but Charlie was even worse than in the first game; so bad that Colin gave up in disgust at the fifteenth, packed his clubs, and came snorting to the clubhouse. On top of this he found out about Charlie's courtship of his daughter. O, he was dynamite! He could stand for a pretty bad game of golf, but mooning swains about his doorstep were to him as a match in a powder magazine. He forgot to take his one and only Scotch; and he stalked away over the course for his home.

We sympathized with Charlie; that is, we sympathized after the manner of our kind, a sort of back-slapping, jeering sympathy which didn't seem to improve Charlie very much. But the cat was out of the bag, the milk had been spilled, and the kettle of fish was pretty and all the rest of the metaphors were hurrying to the scene. We immediately made it the club romance and threw our immoral support to Charlie; you know, the whole club loves a lover so long as he doesn't meddle with your own little romance.

Charlie confided in two or three of us; but you know how that is? He might as well have bought a megaphone. You see, everybody was in favor of him and his romance; everybody was tingling with curiosity and interest. We used to come in from the course, gather in little knots, and all make alibis at once. Now it was changed. Those who came in from the course and those who had just come out from town all spread their ears to hear the latest about Charlie and Sue and old Colin MacKay. You could tell how things were going by just watching their faces. If they were happy and grinning, why, it was certain that Charlie had just won a pot, in a manner of speaking; but if they frowned and seemed down-hearted, you knew old Colin had rung in an extra ace. So it wasn't any use for Charlie to confide in any of us; we promised to keep still and then loped off to spread the tidings.

The course of true love with Charlie was about as smooth as a pile of lump coal. He had arrived at a middling understanding with Sue previous to the debacle, as you might say; but now, with Colin most beautifully advised in the premises, Charlie had about as much chance as a rabbit. Say Charlie could be at the five hole, a half a mile from the clubhouse, and feel a distinct draft the minute old MacKay entered the front gate. Sometimes they would meet in the nineteenth and old MacKay would glare at him as if Charlie owed him money and was trying to dodge him.

There were no more descriptive talks about the collection, either; those gnarled and battle scarred clubs and balls from bonnie Scotland reposed in their glass case in solemn array. O, how old Colin hated himself for being nice to Charlie after that first game! But, as I have previously mentioned, collections and collectors mighty often grow to be bores to themselves.

Well, one day Charlie came to me and swore me to secrecy. This was to be something extra fine, double A, warm information; and it was.

"Jim," he said, "I simply can't hold it any longer. I haven't any business telling you because it's a secret just between Sue and me; but if I don't tell it I'll explode."

I swore to keep the secret, begged him to break the suspense, and got ready to gallop around and spread the news about the lodge.

"Old man, we're going to elope!"

"Good boy," I said. Wow! what a budget for the Cupid's Auxiliary society. "When?"

"You know, Jim," he said, "how the old—old—er—gentleman keeps his eye peeled on me? Well, that's nothing to the way he guards Sue. Why, I've scarcely had an opportunity to wave my hand to her in a month. But yesterday we managed to have a talk; we met at the handkerchief counter in a department store. Yes, I'd been following her all afternoon for the chance. Her aunt became interested in some linens. I bought $34 worth of pink and lavender handkerchiefs while we were talking; got rattled, you know?"

"Then the plot is all laid?"

"And hatching," said Charlie. "I'm to meet her at 5 o'clock tomorrow. I already have the license and the minister will be waiting."

He was as ebullient as an alarm clock in a dormitory. He sauntered away over the tree tops, nodding pleasantly to the clouds. I nearly fractured a leg getting into the nineteenth to enlighten the gossips; not excitedly, but dispensing my treasure meagerly, which is extremely irritating to those with a bent for information of a low and personal sort. I cannot recall an occasion when I was so popular and so prolific. I doled out my fund of tattle sparingly until the chief subject matter was exhausted and then I added bits of improvised decoration here and there to give it depth and completeness.

Charlie was at the club next day almost before the steward was out of bed. My, but he was in a fine fettle. The reason I know is because we were all there early, too. It began to look like an English bank holiday; the members had this romance at heart, you see. The interest had been long gathering, as one might say, like a Derby. You know how a secret will spread; it went all over the club, even to the willows down by that impossible eighth.

You see, it was Charlie's idea to spend the day at the club so nobody would notice anything; so old Colin MacKay wouldn't notice anything, that is. You know if a real smart detective wants to hide the important state document he doesn't bore a hole in a table leg and stuff it in there; no, he places it in plain view—making it so obvious that when the chief of the secret service comes along he passes it up because it isn't mysterious. Well, that was Charlie's plan. He knew old Colin would be at the club, so therefore he decided to be there, too, making himself obvious and disarming all possible suspicion. But when it came to hiding state documents in full view of the audience old Colin was no corner policeman. The first thing that surprised, astonished, and astounded the assembled multitude that day was when old Colin hove into view with his golf togs on. He was smiling. No, not a stingy, tight lipped, mincing smile, but a large, sunny, magnanimous grin which folded to his bosom the whole world and all its shortcomings. Now, that wasn't in the recipe at all. The next thing that amazed and bewildered the merry villagers was when old Colin walked lightly up to Charlie, tapped him roguishly on the arm, and said:

"I hear you've been improving your drive and I want to play around with you."

Charlie was so fussed he couldn't talk. But you can see the fix he was in; he simply had to play. Of course, Charlie didn't know the whole gallery was in on the secret, but he had a most thoroughly guilty feeling. And the old man's conduct was so inexplicable. For weeks he had done nothing but glower at Charlie and walk coldly past him and now he invited him to play, and on the very day of the projected elopement. It didn't seem logical.

We were all pretty much of a mind that, while Charlie was perhaps a smart young man, the person he had in view for a father-in-law was no imbecile, and we in all probability would see a neat display of wits before the day was over. Of course, we all loved old Colin, and do now, but in that particular match our sympathies were entirely with Charlie, and old MacKay knew it. But he hadn't gathered up a few millions without learning to watch his step. Anyway, you should have seen Charlie's game that day. O, it was poison. He blinked like a rooster that had been hit by a club and can't decide which is tipping, itself or the earth. But old MacKay never seemed to notice; in fact, he only smiled more and more when Charlie produced some new and shocking form of violating the ethics of the course. Charlie's first drive shot into a moist sand bunker. He tried to loft it out with a couple of idiotic swipes and then lost patience. When old Colin came up there was his would-be son-in-law whacking desperately away at the poor bunker as if he were trying to kill a snake. With one of these maniacal strokes he had managed to hoist the ball a matter of twenty yards, but he didn't know it; he kept whacking away.

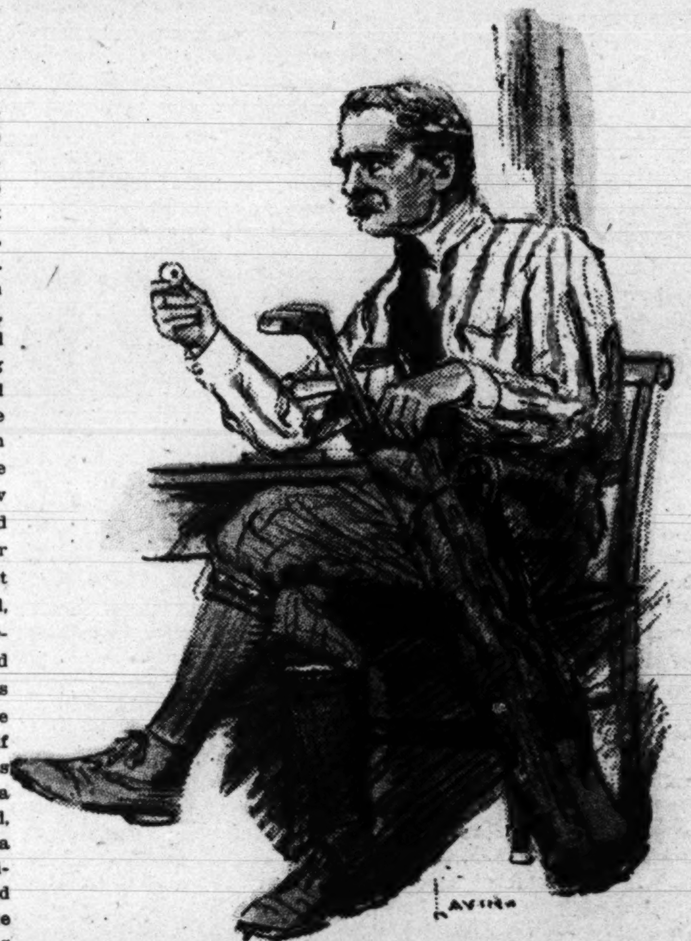
"That bunker is charted as a regular hazard, isn't it?" asked old Colin.

"Yes, sir, I think it is," said Charlie, looking up, all perspiration and confusion.

"Well, then, I don't believe I'd tear it down, would you?"

Charlie was licked again. But the old man remained inscrutable and good humored. At the eleventh Charlie had a most odious lie fifty yards from the hole. He struck out wildly and made it. Old Colin didn't even bat an eye. Some self-possession, eh?

They went around once. Old Colin must have another round. That was incomprehensible. Everybody knew perfectly well that under ordinary circumstances old Colin would rather have taken strychnine than play twice around with Charlie. Then it dawned upon us all that something was up; incontrovertibly and irrevocably up. And we suspected that whatever was up had been elevated by old Colin. Presently it filtered through our several brains that the old codger had stumbled onto the secret of the projected elopement and he was blandly making a mess of the whole business. It was late in the afternoon, drawing nearer to the witching hour of 5 every minute, and still MacKay clung to Charlie and begged for another game. Charlie managed to buttonhole me for a moment.



LAVIN

"This one," he said, with an unexpected tenderness, "is worth the history of them all."

"Jim," he said, "the old—er—gentleman is dead next. He's going to keep me playing here until sundown and I don't dare refuse or he'll make it tough on Sue. And, Lord, Jim, Sue will be waiting for me at 5."

"Why don't you run for it?" I said.

"And show him I'm not as game as he is? Not much. I wouldn't show the white feather now. But what will Sue think?"

It was too much for me. Charlie turned to old Colin and said. "Excuse me while I get a cigar and we'll start around again."

He skipped into the clubhouse and was back in a minute. Maybe the cigar exercised a wonderfully soothing influence, for Charlie was now quite calm and collected. But his playing hadn't improved much. And yet when I thought of it afterward he seemed to be playing with studied clumsiness. But perhaps I just imagined it. Old Colin smiled more broadly than ever. It was 4 o'clock and it would take at least two hours to go around. That would make it 6 o'clock and the elopement would be spoiled beyond all hope. We all speculated on whether old Colin and his daughter would be sailing suddenly the next day for Italy or Japan; it was certain he wouldn't trust her another twenty-four hours in the same hemisphere with Charlie. And we all felt pretty sad about it, too, I can tell you.

The first at Aismuir is a clean straightaway of 190 yards and without an obstruction. Old Colin made a three. Charlie drove off into the virgin forest somewhere to the left and finally wound up with a seven. On the second Charlie sliced about four times and got another seven. We felt pretty sorry for him. The third was a drive almost straight west. It was just northwest of here that the club grounds and the MacKay estate joined. The junction, if I may call it that, was sheltered in the cool little maple grove, and between the course and the grove was a considerable creek. It was here that Charlie made the star boob slice in all the history of golf. At that I didn't blame him much. It was after 4 o'clock, away after, and Charlie was thinking of that combination of gold and sunshine and blue waiting for him and he was rattled. He had a right to be rattled. He swung his club a few times and then cracked the ball a daisy. That is, it would have been a daisy if it had only gone in the right direction, but it didn't; it made a long, graceful curve, swerved to the northwest, and dropped gently into the middle of the maple grove.

"Holy smoke," said Charlie, with a groan, "over the creek, into the woods, and out of bounds."

No use to look for that ball, we all agreed. I followed its marvelous course and was still looking into the grove, thinking what a whale of a drive it was, after all. As I looked into the maples I thought I saw a flicker of white in the trees, but I guessed it wasn't anything. Charlie brought out a new ball and this time he drove a dandy down fairway. The game seemed to settle down after that.

Old Colin was in high spirits when he and Charlie reached the nineteenth. It was around 6 o'clock. Everybody knew that Charlie's romance had gone up the flue and everybody was sorry and everybody was mad clear through to think that old MacKay could put one over without ever batting an eye. Then, just to make his victory more heinous, the old gentleman went to the open telephone in the grill and called his house so we could all hear. We knew he was talking to Sue, because he made it a point to ask for her and tell her he would be home to dinner in an hour. O, she was home, all right. Old Colin evidently had figured out that she would wait an hour for Charlie and then go back to the old fireside, broken hearted.

Charlie hung around for a little while. He didn't seem joyous and we felt for him. Then he dolefully bade us good night, and as he went out I thought I saw a gleam of victory in old Colin's eye. He laughed, the old reprobate. Then he grew amiable with us, though we weren't wild to have him. It had been weeks since he had taken his accustomed Scotch and held forth on the subject of his collection. We saw we were due for a resumption of this boresome pastime, and so we yawned. Old MacKay turned to the glass case with the clubs and balls and other knick-knacks. Then he gasped as one does with a sudden attack of the heart. His eyes stood out like a fifer's and the blood mounted to his cheeks.

"Some one has stolen a ball out of my collection," he said in a hollow voice.

"Good heavens!" we all shouted in one sarcastic chorus.

He stood for a moment as if in a trance. Then he sailed out the door and called for his car. When it came he fairly leaped into it and was gone. We casually gathered around the collection and made comments. There was no question about it; the gutta percha primá donna of the lot had disappeared.

Old Colin broke all the speed laws, some fence posts, and ten commandments getting home. He tore into the house and yelled: "Where is Sue?"

"She's gone for a walk with one of her girl friends," said the maiden aunt.

Colin dashed up the stairs and into Sue's room. His glance hastily flew over everything and then lighted on an object on her dressing table. He jumped for it. It was his precious gutta percha ball. He fumbled it a moment and then plucked at a bit of paper in the hole. He drew it out, unfolded it, and read:

"Sue, dear: Your father has found out. He is sticking right by me until it's too late. He will probably telephone. When he does, I'll race over and pick you up.

"CHARLIE."

Then a great light broke on old Colin. Through a kind of a mist in his eyes he saw Charlie swinging; saw a funny little ball rise and veer off the course and settle in the maple grove. But he didn't know that I had seen a flicker of white among the trees and that when Charlie made that boob slice he had put every bit of his soul into it and that the flicker of white was Sue.

The ball still in the collection, you say? You bet. Did you see the gray old fellow coming up the path with his arm around a quiet, efficient youth? That was old Colin and Charlie. They play a neck and neck game now.

New Fall Suits Show Knee Length Coats

by Corinne Lowe

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—There are some women who look so well in a plain tailored suit that they should never move out. One girl we know is like that. She is one of those big, well seasoned blondes—the kind that was built to stand on the prow of a Viking ship—red cheeked, wheat colored as to hair, and she can do most anything in athletics. When this girl essays evening dresses or even day dresses she has a sort of homeless, what shall I do next expression. But when she gets into her navy or black tailored suit, with her tailored silk shirt and her plain sailor hat, even her aunts and sisters say, "Now you look well."

This girl always dresses her type. Every season she goes to the most famous of Fifth avenue tailors and walks out with one of her plain suits. They don't vary much from year to year, but that does not make any difference. For after all the business of dressing well consists merely of finding out how one looks best and then doing it.

The tailored suit will always have many faithful followers in America. It suits our athletic American girl much better than these garment desserts they whip up for us. And it has, of course, the advantage of a much greater economy than the more whimsical tailleur.

There can be no doubt about it. Suits of all kinds are going to be more than ever the star of the wardrobe this coming winter. The simple little tailored one will be worn for mornings and the more elaborate models take the place of the frock and coat for afternoon affairs. Indeed, as as has been said, so many of our girls look their best in the smart tailored models that these will often go ticking through every hour of the day.

Meanwhile the suits from Paris are rolling in on us. Today we are showing four of these imported models, exemplifying the range of the fall suit scale. All illustrate the fanciful twist given by the French to this type of garment.

In looking over recent importations one is struck with the number of knee length jackets which prevail. Perhaps three-fourths of the suits are made with this verbose kind of coat. On the other hand, there are some smart models with the hip length variety. In both types we note a prejudice in favor of semi-fitted coats.

Among these new suits our old friends, duvetyn and velours de laine get a good deal of the calcium glow. Fur is a prominent feature of all suits, and the old convertible collars, big and burly as a Russian grand duke's, are still much used. And, by the way, fur doesn't need to be the honest to animal kind. Rodier and some of the rest of those French designers have seen to it that we get some excellent imitations. As some one has said, in fact, these new furs are more foxy than foxlike.

At the left we give a charming suit of lightweight velours in a lovely warm shade of brown. Braid and embroidery, and particularly soutache braid, are used constantly in these new fall suits. Sometimes they stand alone, and other times they are combined with fur. In either case, braid and embroidery are elaborate. In this suit the velours is finished in soft color braid.

So ingenious are the exits and entries of these coats nowadays that we don't know how they ever get their cues. In our duvetyn suit, for instance, one sees no buttons. It is entered clandestinely at the sides. For the rest, tabs fall gracefully over the girdle and the sleeves with their separate braided piece at the sides open to the elbow.

September is a crafty month. Although we always think of it as a relief from hot weather, it quite frequently manages to introduce a good deal of thermometer into our days. For the warm days of fall is shown the next stunning model—one of satalga, the de luxe alpaca. This occurs in mauve color and is trimmed with soutache in the same tint. The coat, dipping down gracefully in the back, the embroidered sleeves, the neck line, and the embroidered inserts at the side are all worth noting.

Among the fall suits one finds a great number of three piece models. Also, there is a liberal allowance of coat dresses, which nowadays are much more like coats than they are like dresses. For example, many of them have the big loose coat sleeves and the typical coat collars.

An elaborate afternoon model of the three piece suit is presented in the third figure from the left. When was it that blue serge and black satin first commenced their lover-like ways? We can't seem to remember. All we know is that they seem doomed to wander hand in hand through an eternity of style. This three piece suit illustrates them still billing and cooing at each other. The coat is of blue serge and its entire back sleeves, sides, and the upper part of its front are beautifully embroidered in black silk. At the cuffs, deeper on the under side than on the top, enter the black satin! This same fabric composes the high yoke collar, which is in one with a scarflike piece that, hanging down to the hem of the skirt, furnishes a new version of the flying panel. These panels are finished with black silk fringe and a black silk cord slipped through the coat confines the panels in front.

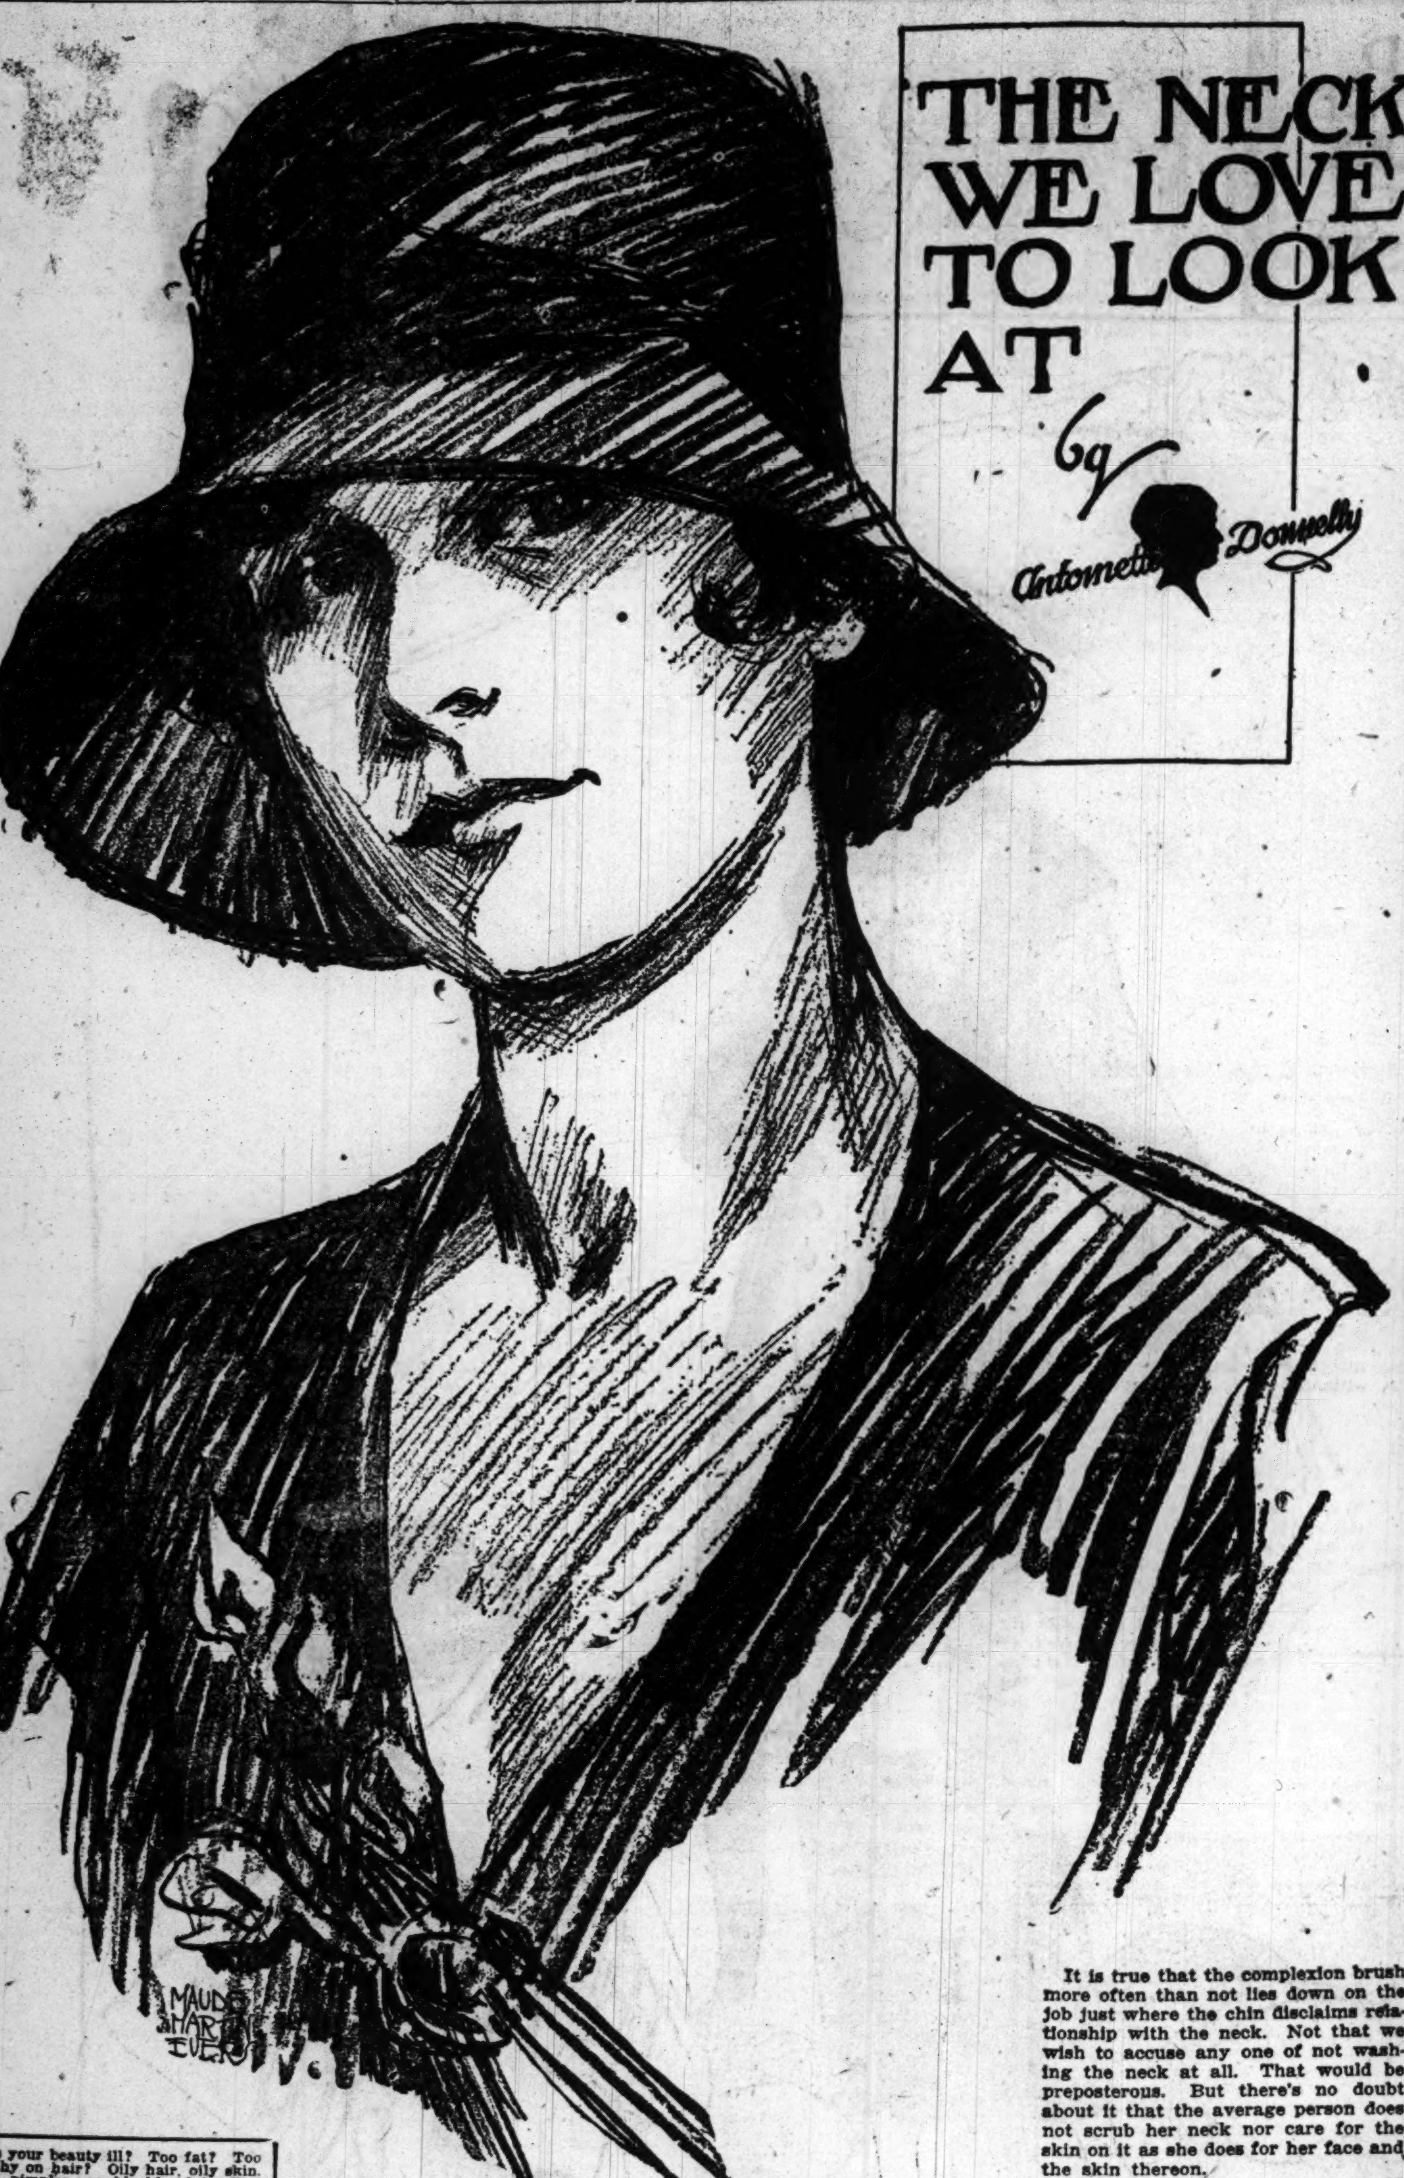
THE suit plot thickens when the suit-wright takes brown velours, braids it in self-color, fastens it clandestinely at the side, and allows loose tabs to fall over the girdle. The suit next to this is one of mauve satalga touched off with self-color braid, and the third is an elaborate three piece costume of blue serge and black satin dexterously embroidered in black silk. At the last a brown silk jersey sports suit with a slip-over coat and a collar which ripens into a scarf.

The dress which goes with this is a perfectly plain little black satin with a narrow skirt. Save for the finishing band of the round neck line and the insets of the skirt—both of serge embroidered in black silk—this frock is untrimmed. It has, by the way, the short tight sleeves which have appeared all through the summer.

Jersey continues to hypnotize us as much as ever. There are all kinds of new jersey steps, much rag-timing of the old fabric. Djersey, the embossed jersey which was the foreign success of last summer, is supplanted this year by Djersella, embellished with a tapestrie boderie achieved by flat shoestring braid woven in and out of the mesh of the cloth.

As for jersey sports suits, these have been good all summer and will be worn until late in the fall. At the right we are showing one of the new models, this in brown silk jersey, trimmed with a check formed by heavy stitching in self-color thread. Like so many of the suits, this one is a slipover model and the leading feature is the continuation of the collar into a scarf edged with heavy tassels of brown silk.

The skirts which have emigrated to us from France nearly all show the straight line. Now and then there is the inclination to a slightly hobbled effect, but as a rule they seem to prefer the line unbroken save by panels or panel effects. In achieving the latter there is, by the way, much use of the good old box plait.



THE NECK WE LOVE TO LOOK AT

By Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Or, what is your beauty ill? Write it in to me. I have a tonic, a diet, an exercise, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, Chicago Tribune.

NECKS are like ankles these days—sometimes shapely and sometimes not, but obvious—most obvious always! There are thin necks, and fat necks, and short necks, and long necks, and round necks, and V necks, and square necks, and just necks. It's necks, necks everywhere the eye is apt to light, but not every one so good to look at!

Says the gentleman in the observation car, which may be any car on wheels: "Do you note the high water mark the ladies are wearing this year? Why doth the work of the merry complexion brush end with the chin? Is it a black and white idea they're trying to vogue?"

Inclined to be a bit peeved with the slur on the sex, we argued.

"Well, look at the back of that woman's neck," he protested, "and that one and that one." And we looked around the car and sure enough the black and white scheme was sufficiently in evidence to give him a score.

Now, it stands to reason and argument that if we are going to clutter the landscape up thusly with necks, we owe it to the gentlemen in the observation cars and on foot to make the scenery just as beautiful as possible. Is it not so?

First, there is the matter of shape in necks. Now, if a neck is long and stringy like certain well known beans, there are little tricks to be exercised in keeping the fact from every observer. The high collar is the main trick. But even long, stringy necked folk must have comfort in warm weather, and no one ever accused a high collar of contributing much to that cause. But this year there are wonderful little artifices in the nature of frills and round necked waists that cut off lengths and ambush bones and hollows.

Square necked waists are also on the market to tempt and lead astray the neck that would look better in a V shape. The square neck is not for a thick neck nor for a neck with swollen thyroid glands and goiter tendency. It accentuates the appearance of the trouble when a V neck hugging the throat up close will give a line that pleases.

About this condition: It frequently happens in young girls there is a tendency to a disfigurement of the neck on account of disturbances of these glands. But more frequently than not with the girls' development the trouble outgrows itself. In cases where the enlargement of the neck glands does become conspicuous and permanent the advice of a physician should be had and a remedy sought before an uglier and more dangerous condition results.

Studying the line of your neck may have as successful an outcome in your general appearance as the line of your hat or the lines of your dress. After all, we women know that lines are more important in a smart appearance than cut or material. For instance, a short necked woman should not wear a round collar or a high cut low neck. She has license to wear her neck low enough to eliminate that crowded, stubby look.

What this type of woman does to her neck when she conceives an attachment for high collars is touching. Double chin and overhanging baskets of fat, please testify!

Now, you want to remember your neck is an awfully good friend. It supports your head and all there is in it, and even if there isn't anything much in it, it sticks and keeps on holding up its end. In return for which a little consideration might be given it.

First among these is not to bring criticism upon it for uncleanliness, and that rather than its shape and the tricks of transformation is the import of this talk.

It is true that the complexion brush more often than not lies down on the job just where the chin disclaims relationship with the neck. Not that we wish to accuse any one of not washing the neck at all. That would be preposterous. But there's no doubt about it that the average person does not scrub her neck nor care for the skin on it as she does for her face and the skin thereon.

Which isn't fair to the outside world when there's as much of it showing!

At the base of the neck on some folk you see something that looks like a shadow, which when the searchlight and a scrubbing brush are turned upon it disappears and improves the appearance a whole lot. On other necks you will see blackheads that the wearer would shudder to have found upon her face. The same treatment will get rid of them on the neck and chest as on the face. It is simple enough. A good soap and a scrubbing brush morning and night is the first of the first aids. Then the regular bath morning and night.

Attention to diet is just as important for regulating the condition of the neck skin as the skin on the face. Your bowels must be kept free. That done half the skin troubles of the world would be eliminated. Vegetables and fruit are easy to get these days. Eat lots of them and drink lots of water. Some women have pimples on the neck that they let go unconcerned about. The diet will fix this up and the other advice I've given you above.

A simple cure for constipation and one that cleans your system up remarkably is a tablespoon of bran in a glass of hot water taken before breakfast every morning until you are improved.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING TO WIN THE WAR?

Have you ideas on food, dress, and health conservation to pass along, or ideas on money saving and money raising? This department is an exchange for the women who are helping to win the war. For every letter published "The Tribune" will pay $1. Do you need advice on questions pertaining to this important work of helping win the war. This department will advise you gladly. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address letters on this subject to Antoinette Donnelly, Chicago Tribune.

GIVE FIGHTERS YOUR TALENTS.

THERE is a branch of service one does not hear so much about but which must be numbered among the noblest in the war work going on. It is volunteer service and work for women. When you realize that there are hundreds of boys at the Great Lakes and Fort Sheridan hospitals and that these women and girls volunteer their services in song and other entertainment to boys in hospitals, sick and miserably lonely and far away from home, you will agree if you have talent it is an opportunity for a work that will give much happiness and return you much more for bringing it into the lives of these boys at the most trying and critical part of their training.

It is a real service, and one that is in need of more recruits. Undoubtedly there are a number of girls with talent for reading, singing, playing, who would welcome the chance to serve in this capacity but do not know how to go about offering their services.

It isn't play for the volunteers. It is a regular job which takes time and hard work as well as talent. No different from anything else worth while, we might add. The volunteers must hold themselves ready to appear at any time and place that the secretary of the organization happens to call on them. You may see a group of them at the Ravine in the detention camp at Great Lakes going through a program of difficult numbers on a sweltering night, but doing their work gladly and cheerfully, buoyed up by the genuine appreciation of the boys in the audience.

A number of professionals have volunteered a part of their time. But anybody who can sing, dance, or play a stringed instrument—particularly the ukelele—will be welcomed with open arms by Miss Clare Nuyck, who is the booking agent, with office at the headquarters of the war camp community service, 120 West Adams street.

Miss Nuyck has daily calls from the hospitals for these forms of entertainment. Readings and impersonations are also in favor with the convalescents. The work is not confined to hospital work. Entertainers are sent to many of the Saturday and Sunday jackie parties.

The only applicants who are ever obliged to wait at the booking agency are the ones calling for the entertainment. The demand is so great that applicants are snapped up immediately they give their names.

There is a regular weekly schedule in progress and programs are arranged at the hospitals at Fort Sheridan and Great Lakes, Camp Perry, and the Ravine at Great Lakes, the Diamond Motor Truck camp, Harrison Technical High school, Armour institute, Camp Bradley, at Peoria, and the aviation camp at Rantoul.

Good Recipes Passed Along.

It seems strange, but it is true, that people are rather afraid to try new recipes because they "don't sound good," so I thought of a way to help them out.

I try about every new recipe that is possible and of the best I make five copies and send to five friends, with a little note telling how much we enjoyed it, asking them to try it and if they liked it to copy and send to five of their friends, telling them the same thing. Thus a sort of chain is formed and considerable wheat, fat, etc., can be saved where it otherwise might not have been.

People will attempt a new recipe if they know a friend has tried it and can vouch for its goodness. Be sure to give the recipe correctly, because a great deal would be wasted if the recipe were copied carelessly. A. D.

Mother and Daughter Knitting.

I am a widow and allowed my only boy of 18 to enlist in the army, and he has been in France a number of months. I have taken a position in order to keep my daughter in school.

I want to do my bit for my country and have knitted evenings as much as possible. I have made three sweaters, four pairs of socks, and two scarfs.

My daughter has made three pairs of socks.

We have a small garden which we care for evenings.

I have four nephews in the war besides my boy. We have given all the boys in the family to our country. My daughter is saving to buy thrift stamps, and I have bought one bond. A. E.

Girls' Knitting Class.

I have a class of fifteen girls and give them two lessons per week. We average fifteen sweaters, wristlets, and helmets, with several pairs of socks. The latter we took up last, so cannot tell yet the number. We belong to the junior auxiliary and have pledged ourselves to work for the Red Cross during vacation. We have collected four pounds of tinfoil and seven of us have bought Liberty bonds or war stamps. E. R. L.

Using Old Dresses.

If you have two dresses with good parts to them, ripe apart and dye black. They will make one nice dress, unless the goods is green or purple; they do not take any other color well. H. M.

Camp Stories Contest.

Your son, your brother, your husband, or your sweetheart in the service undoubtedly has told you some amusing incident that has occurred in his camp. Undoubtedly, too, there are ever so many stories originating in camp that are still untold. This contest is especially open to the soldier himself if he has a good camp story to tell. It is open also to every one who has been told a good camp story of actual happening. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address Camp Stories Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Believed in Reincarnation.

A lady was visiting the camp our boys are in and was talking religion to them. She asked them if they "believed in reincarnation." Bill said: "Yes, ma'am, but we call it hash."

That Stumped Him.

I was taking the examination for the aviation signal corps when a young fellow came into the room to take the examination. While the sergeant was examining the ones ahead of this man he was studying the letters on the eye card intently. The sergeant noticed it, so when he got to the eye test he said so that all could hear him: "Well, I suppose you know this side pretty well by now, so I guess we will turn it around and read the other side." A 1900 Egg.

Didn't Clean 'Em.

There was a certain husky young soldier in a regiment of infantry. This young buck private was tall and extremely wide. Some time ago he sent a uniform to the cleaners. It was returned with a note: "Sorry, sir, but we don't clean tents." M. R.

Order Not Complete.

Infantry drill regulations explains "To halt," as follows: "At the command 'halt,' given as either foot strikes the ground, plant the other foot as in marching; raise and place the first foot by the side of the other." To help the recruits the drill sergeants usually count, "One, two," the time in which the movement must be executed.

Recently a Negro recruit at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., was challenged by a sentry when he started to enter camp after the hour for challenging.

"Halt, who's there?" the sentry challenged.

"Ah niggah o' th' niggah infantry," he replied.

The Negro advanced at a cadence of quick time—120 steps per minute.

"Halt," the sentry ordered.

The recruit did not stop until he stood beside the guard.

"Why didn't you obey my order to halt?" the sentry yelled at him.

"Ah was waitin' foh you t' count 'One, Two,'" the Negro replied.

He Got Disgusted.

A letter from my brother in California was received three months after he went to camp. As soon as they were in camp they were quarantined as usual, for ten days. Then a case of smallpox broke out and they were quarantined for fifteen days more. Next came measles, for which they were again quarantined for five days.

One day before the quarantine for measles lifted a boy was sent to the hospital with the mumps. Again they were quarantined.

My brother wrote home in disgust.

"Ma," he wrote; "if they get another case of mumps in this place I'll never get out till the war's over."

Tickled to Death.

In the camp here they have all sorts of sports, also movies at night.

A young lady, after looking over the camp, was heard to remark, "The government sure tries to make the boys happy."

"Yes, my last suit of underwear just tickled me to death," said an old timer, grinning.

Dutch Sleeps On.

At camp "Dutch," as he was called, was reputably the biggest sleepyhead and most absent minded individual existing.

One night "Dutch" was, as usual, in blissful repose when some of the buildings in the barracks caught fire and the alarm was spread rapidly to all parts of the camp, and the fire finally came alarmingly near the bunk where "Dutch" was dreaming of shooting the Huns into Hades.

In his sleep "Dutch" finally got up and wandered to another part of the barracks, where he crawled into some one's bunk and peacefully slept on amid the roar and clatter, flames and smoke.

Not until long after the building had burned to the ground and only cinders and ashes were left did any one think of "Dutch.". After a prolonged search they finally found him, sweetly and blissfully sleeping with the cover pulled up around his chin like an innocent babe, and closely clasping in either hands his girl's picture and a safety razor. Target Not His Mark.

The officers' mess was discussing rifle shooting.

"I'll bet any one here," said one young lieutenant, "that I can fire twenty shots at 200 yards and call each shot correctly without waiting for the marker. I'll stake a box of cigars I can."

"Done!" cried the major.

The whole mess was on hand early next morning to see the experiment tried. The lieutenant fired.

"Miss," he calmly announced.

A second shot.

"Miss," he repated.

"Here, there! Hold on!" protested the major. "What are you trying to do? You're not shooting for the target at all."

"Of course not," admitted the lieutenant, "I'm firing for those cigars." And he got them. B. H.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

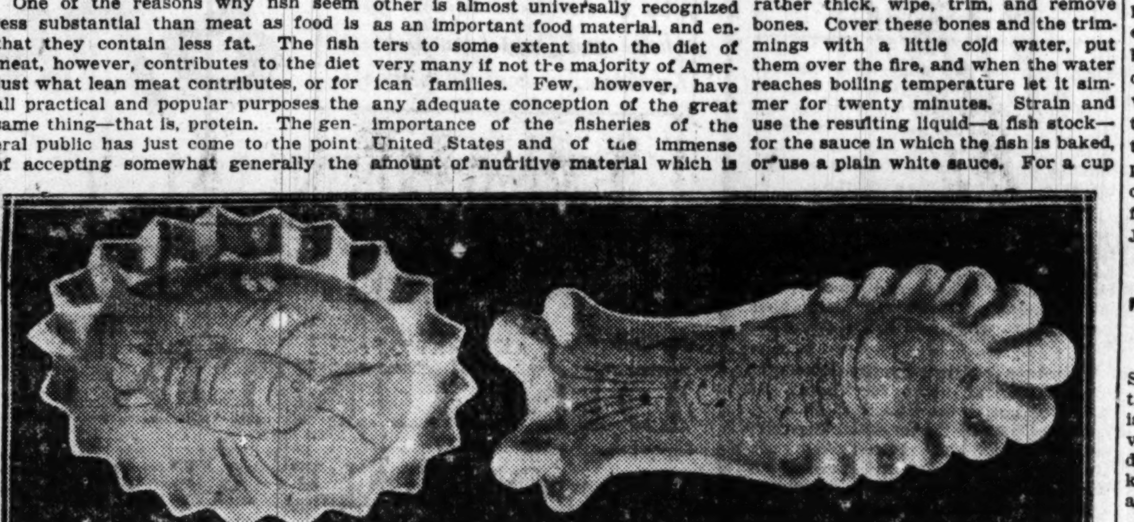
FISH POSSIBILITIES.

THE marketing of meat, certainly one of the most perishable of products, has been reduced to such a science that we do not need to worry about meat waste because of meat spoilage. The chief market waste in meat today is due to the careless trimmings made by meat clerks, to poor cooking, and to unintelligent eating. Beefsteaks are today cut as thin as in Milan or Turin, Italy, where they are so thin that about the only way to give them substance is to "stuff" them with some paste of vegetables and roll them.

Little fried fish garnished with green look cool and palatable.

And though it is not just to the point, it may be not out of the way to mention that when these thin steaks are broiled or fried they should be eaten every whit. In the past it has been customary to cut the lean out of its framework of fat and leave the latter on the plate. Some of that fat has cooked into the lean to make it more palatable and just as truly some of the juices of the lean have cooked into the fat, making it palatable—that is, if the fire of the cooking has not been too hot. Try it. It is patriotic to "eat your plate clean." It is intelligent to eat what often amounts in calories to half the sum in the whole piece. The world is suffering for fats; do not waste this bit! Weight for weight or bulk for bulk there is often three times the calories in the fat part of your steak that there is in the lean part. It is easier to eat the fat from a thin steak than from a thick one.

One of the reasons why fish seem less substantial than meat as food is that they contain less fat. The fish meat, however, contributes to the diet just what lean meat contributes, or for all practical and popular purposes the same thing—that is, protein. The general public has just come to the point of accepting somewhat generally the word protein, though without as much comprehension as some quite slight mental effort would bring them; therefore it seems not worth while to talk much about how different foods produce characteristic or different proteins. It is well to know that milk protein is perhaps the best of all.



Enameled salad molds for fish. These are much safer than plain block molds, especially when the salad is jellied.

Milk and Fish.

As a part of the meat saving effort of the present the two other great protein foods, milk and fish, are being urged upon the people by all the agents of conservation. Greater emphasis has been placed upon milk because it carries other highly important values besides the protein, and because we have it in such abundance, and because an increasing abundance is one of the easy possibilities, to say nothing of its being indispensable to the child.

The possibilities of fish as food have not been so well developed. It is said that most families who buy fish know about ten fish, and no more. I should say that most families know about five kinds or not so many as that even. In the New York City markets it is said that a hundred kinds worthy of trial appear each year. It seems traditional for most Americans to eat salt cod, but while those doing the most work to promote fish eating believe there are great possibilities of expansion, the campaigns for the introduction of new species seem to have but doubtful success.

It is my opinion that we do not so much need to get new fish to market as we need to get into the market people who know any fish and have a sort of high reverence for it as food with a higher sense of its economical value. I wonder if it is because any man, even in a city of the size of Chicago, can go out and catch a frying of fish without boat or net, that fish still seem of small importance from the money standpoint, and therefore not worthy the care that meat receives. Sometimes food fishes not ordinarily abundant on certain fishing grounds suddenly do become so, large catches are then made and the fish largely wasted. This happens over and over.

We know too little about the possibilities of what is called a "slack market" in such food, because we have too few fish markets, and too few people selling fish intelligently to learn much. It is quite terrible that we have often to go out of the way in summer to avoid a wholesale fish wagon standing by the curb. It is not only the odor from this that is intolerable but to see the massing of flies on the half open boxes and in them is truly sickening.

It is unfortunate that one of the most boundless of our food supplies should be the most inaccessible. The bureau of fisheries does its great and splendid work, seemingly detached from the odors and flies, but I am pessimistic about our progress, perhaps because I had twice to pass one of those fish carts the other day. Such an experience drags one back far from a carefully built up sense of the true sanctity of food!

Saved from Loss.

But if teaching and preaching do not get far, perhaps scolding about the fish business will get less far. An old (1907) government bulletin on fish says: "Fish in one form or another is almost universally recognized as an important food material, and enters to some extent into the diet of very many if not the majority of American families. Few, however, have any adequate conception of the great importance of the fisheries of the United States and of the immense amount of nutritive material which is every year taken from the salt and fresh waters of the country. . . . The total weight of the fish products of the United States as they leave the hands of the fishermen is about 2,169,000,000 pounds, representing in round numbers as the value of the catch $58,000,000. By the processes of canning, salting, smoking, and otherwise preserving, the value of fish is very much increased."

If it were not for these methods of preserving I am pessimistic enough to believe that a large proportion of this "nutritive material" would be an utter loss. One other method of preserving of immense importance has come into use since 1907. "Winter caught" fish are frozen alive, and "shore caught" fish are preserved by freezing for a wider and wider use.

When we adopt the foreign method of selling live fish from tanks of water, in which they are as well cared for as goldfish, then will we have greater cleanliness surrounding at all times this food of great possibilities.

The unfortunate thing is that the small fish, those most delicate of flavor, make the most dirt and are handled in the dirtiest fashion. Halibut, large codfish, and salmon, or almost any fish large enough to cut in steaks, is marketed much as meat is. Small fish contaminate and are contaminated in the market.

Fish steaks are also popular among buyers, because cleaning fish is distasteful to people who are not neat, and to those who are none too fond of work.

It really has become a point of honor, or patriotic, to eat fish. An easy to lazy way out of this has been to eat fish from the can. It is far more patriotic and consistent to eat the fish from the market, and it is also necessary if we are ever to raise the standards of fish marketing.

Frying Fish.

The American idea of fried fish is identical with what is elsewhere called pan frying. In cosmopolitan cookery frying means completely immersing the food to be cooked in deep fat. Good pan frying can be done when only about three, or even but two, tablespoons of fat suffices for a panful of fish.

With vegetable oils in plenty, and with a wise economy and rendering of what used to be called refuse fats, it is easy for any household to have fat enough for deep fat fryings. There is an objectionable odor to this sort of cooking, but as the results are likely to be superior, and because the odor is no worse than that from a greased griddle, people who really know how to fry will not give up this method of cooking.

The ideal for fried fish is that it be neither too wet nor too dry, but be crisp through and through. Fried fish which is almost slimy wet on the inside is poor stuff. It really takes a whole treatise to tell how to fry fish. No one should attempt this method of cooking without adequate instruction.

Baked Fish Steaks.

To bake fish steaks with a stuffing is likely to waste considerable of the fish, and to get none too palatable a result, unless one is expert. Fresh cod, in particular, is rather dry unless it is just from the water and is much more palatable if baked in a sauce rather than with a stuffing. The sauce, with some vegetables, also makes it go farther, as does the stuffing. Have the steak cut rather thick, wipe, trim, and remove bones. Cover these bones and the trimmings with a little cold water, put them over the fire, and when the water reaches boiling temperature let it simmer for twenty minutes. Strain and use the resulting liquid—a fish stock—for the sauce in which the fish is baked, or use a plain white sauce. For a cup of sauce or enough for two cod steaks, melt a tablespoon of butter and stir into two level tablespoons of flour. Add the fish stock to this and stir and cook until thick. Salt and otherwise season sauce to taste. Use for the baking a deep enameled plate or a platter, which may be brought to the table. Put the sauce into this and then add the steaks and dip the sauce over them. Also add two medium sized potatoes which have been sliced and scalded for five minutes in boiling water and one small carrot cut in julienne strings. Bake for forty minutes, basting several times. This may be baked in the broiling oven if it can be put far away enough from the fire.

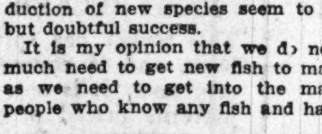
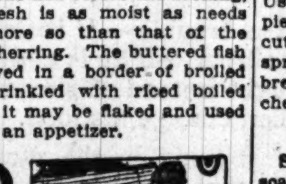
Broiled Smoked Whitefish.

Learn to know when smoked fish is in good condition. The difference between good smoked fish and stale is much the same sort of difference as that between a fresh flower and a wilted, easier to recognize than describe. Wipe a smoked white fish or the Canadian tullibee, which is a larger fish but of the same sort, place under the broiler and broil a small fish five minutes to side and a large one at least six minutes or a little more per side. Take up, remove skin, take off filets carefully, butter them, and serve with lemon juice. It is a waste of fat to put it on the fish before the broiling, since the flesh is as moist as needs be, much more so than that of the smoked sea herring. The buttered fish may be served in a border of broiled rice and sprinkled with riced boiled egg yolk, or it may be flaked and used variously as an appetizer.



A FRIEND IN NEED



Sally Joy Brown

I want to be the medium through which the friend in deed and the friend in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy, and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be only too happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to "The Tribune," but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

Needs Real Help.

There are in the city four little children, Mary, aged 6; Frank, aged 3; James, 2 and Anna 3 months, whose father wanted to fight more than he wanted to do anything else in the world. And so he enlisted, but his wife, though brave, as she can be, said she was not able to make a living for the four tiny ones with the baby still a wee infant.

In a few months she says she will be able to get something to do to support them. So, she got exemption for him. But he wanted to fight regardless of everything else, and enlisted in the British army under an assumed name, thereby leaving the poor mother with the children to look after anyway.

Because of the assumed name there is trouble about getting any soldier allotment, and it will take time to get this straightened out. In the meantime here is a chance for some good patriotic person to make lighter the burden for the young mother. The children need clothes and they need many other things, as you may imagine, with no income and five to be fed and cared for.

I withhold the address, but will be delighted to give it to a generously inclined person or a patriot who sees in this a chance to a return favor for him who's gone to fight.

Better Housekeeping

By Mary Bronson Hartt.

LAMP AND BROOM CLOSET.

THE average house has a broom closet off the kitchen or the back hall—a stuffy little place without either light or ventilation. When we reflect that neither brooms nor dusters are sterilized after using, not even the "dustless dusters" guaranteed to hang on to every atom of dust they touch, it does seem as if the dark broom closet was the most favorable conceivable place for these cleaning utensils to grow molds and other more noxious dust plants.

The plan of the house permitting, it is desirable to have one tiny room with a window always open, devoted to the entire first floor outfit of cleaning things, the entire lamp-tending kit, all stores of odoriferous metal polishes, furniture dressings, soaps and cleaning powders, all left-overs of paint and varnish, and perhaps for convenience the household stock of tools.

All these except the tools are either strong smelling or dusty or carry a fire risk. Paints and varnishes, cloths used in polishing floors, metal polishes with a petroleum base, and kerosene supplies are eyed with suspicion by the fire department. Corral them in one spot and then decree that no light except an electric one shall ever enter the place. If the house isn't wired, keep a small electric flashlight for use here. If the little room has a radiator to keep warm air circulating, so much the better. Unless you require that used floor cloths, saturated with vegetable oils, turpentine, and the like—cloths that really do "spontaneously combust"—be destroyed after each using, insist that they be stored in an old bread box or tin biscuit box. Should they smolder into flame inside the metal the smell of them would probably attract attention before serious harm could be done.

Do not store gasoline in this room in quantities large or small. The risk is too deadly that some day gasoline will get into a lamp.

Brooms and Dusters.

Unless some sort of rack is arranged for the array of brooms, long handled brushes, and mops, all standing discreetly on their handles to rest their straws and bristles, they are likely to sprawl in anything but a tidy way. If the room is wainscotted or has a hook rail at the proper height, a series of 10 cent broomholders will keep them straight and flat against the wall. Between the brooms, hung on screw hooks, will go a variety of special brushes, each with a screw eye fixed in the end of its handle.

If there's a vacuum cleaner of the sweeper type, which cannot very well be stood on its head, rest it against the wall with the sweeper part on a line with the handle, and secure it with a tape loop. Sew a small brass ring to the end of a four inch gray tape, tack the other end, folded under, to the hook rail, set the handle of the sweeper under the tape, and drive through the brass ring a brass headed tack big enough to keep the ring in place, but not too big to allow the ring slipped off when the vacuum cleaner is wanted.

The large hand or electric cleaner, if such is used, would naturally have to stand on the floor. But a big wire spongeholder tacked to the wall might hold the various small attachments or brushes, while the snaky hose, loosely coiled and tied, might be hung by a tape. The fewer the things in this room which rest on the floor the easier it will be to run a brush around and keep it clean.

Washed dusters might properly be tucked according to their kinds into the many labeled pockets of a big shoe bag tacked on the back of the door, but used dusters, never! These want to be shaken out and hung in the air, not stuffed into wads. They might hang from hooks each by its own loop. But dust cloths are so short lived the prospect of sewing loops on a vanishing series would be disheartening. At the 5 and 10 cent stores are to be had big steel business letter clips with holes through their handles to suspend them by. Two or three of these would hold a whole assortment of dusters.

A shelf or two would accommodate a small reserve of soap (the main supply should be drying in the warm attic), soap powders, polishes, floor oils and waxes, paints and varnish, which have no natural place in the kitchen, yet must be on the first floor. Half cans of paint or varnish, by the way, need not be allowed to dry. Pour them into small tins and seal them deep under paraffin wax.

On hooks screwed to the under side off the lowest shelf might hang the cleaning pails of wood fiber or galvanized iron and the long handled dustpan.

Care of Cleaning Utensils.

When cleaning the sweeper always unscrew its handle when emptying out the dust or cleaning the brushes. The thing is so much less ungainly without the handle, and you run less risk of rapping the furniture with the free end of the long stick. To prolong the life of the brush, avoid pulling at hairs or threads wound round it. Clip them between the bristles and also where they are strangling the wheels. Dampen the bristles with a cloth wet in kerosene so the dust won't fly, then clean them with a wire brush. The regular sweeper-cleaner has wire teeth on one side to remove threads and bristles on the other to clean the wooden roller. After cleaning, oil the bearings.

Vacuum cleaning the dustless duster is easily acccomplished if the black cloth is pinned firmly to a carpet.

A new broom should have the straw toughened by a dip in boiling water. Every now and then wash a broom out in hot soapsuds to clean it and keep the straw from getting brittle. It should, of course, stand on its handle, and if you are very particular you'll help it to preserve its shape by drawing on over the handle a jersey made from an old sock leg. Don't buy dyed brooms that are violently green. The dye makes them brittle.

If there's a pyrography outfit in the house it is well to mark the brooms so the newest won't be put to base uses by a careless maid. When a broom gets too old for best, it is easy to carve off the mark.

Bristle brushes should be wiped with a kerosene cloth, to make the dirt mat, then cleaned with a wire brush. Window chamois will not harden if washed with ammonia and warm suds.

Fish Recipes of a Chef.

H. L. Austwick is one of the old-time hotel and club cooks. He was a managing chef at the fair grounds for the full term at the World's Columbian exposition, and chef for nine years and a half for the most exclusive or richest of the men's clubs of Chicago. His experience stretches back to the Civil War days, when he saw service in a government transport and was in the commissary department of one of the army barracks in 1860. In his prime he catered to men and women of every walk in life. One of his maxim's belongs to the great epicurean period of American cookery, when hotel foods were not the tasteless, prickly things they often are today. This maxim is that when a well prepared dish is properly served "its aroma invites comment." We often get too much flavor today and but few aromas.—Jane Eddington.

BY H. L. AUSTWICK.

THE food administration has prepared a chart of the principal varieties of fresh and salt water fish in the markets of the United States and requests the people to use the fish and save the meats. Salmon is plentiful. The Pacific furnishes six varieties. There are three or four dozen food fishes available in our markets which are good and nourishing and cost less money than meat.

Salmon à l'Admiral.

This recipe is for housewives who wish to give a cold lunch at a party or banquet or special occasion. Trout, pickerel, white fish or halibut can be used as well. The size of the fish to be used depends upon the number of guests to be served. It must be wrapped in cheese cloth so that it may be handled without breaking, and simmered in seasoned water, salted with the addition of a few spice to suit the taste, also a little vinegar or light sour wine and a few slices of lemon. After it is cooked decorate it with a jellied mayonnaise and colored jellies and with shrimps and lobster tails. It may be served in the middle of imitation water and waves made out of colored mutton tallow.

Salmon Salad.

One cup of red salmon, cooked or canned; half a cup of the best part of white celery, half a cup of rather stiff mayonnaise. Pick the fish apart and remove all bones and skin. Place on a dish and moisten with French dressing. Add the celery cut fine, which must be dry and cold. Mix gently. Lift up and press in a mold or cup. Set in ice box until wanted, then turn out on a dish and spread over it the mayonnaise. Garnish the edges of the dish with crisp lettuce leaves and sliced hard boiled eggs, or boiled cray fish, or fancy cut beets, to your taste. Salmon can be served in the white part of hard boiled eggs. Use the yolk in the salad cut in small pieces or arranged around the salad cut in halves or mixed with butter and spread on Graham crackers or rye bread cut thin, besprinkled with grated cheese and browned under the gas.

Baked Fresh Pickerel.

Split the fish down the back after scaling it and cut out the backbone. Take off the head, tail and fins. Sprinkle the bottom of the baking tin with a little salt and add half a cup of water. Lay the fish in the pan skin side up. Bake ten or twelve minutes in a hot oven, basting it once with water in the pan. Take the pan out of the oven and remove the skin from the fish. It comes off easily. Beat an egg in a small bowl with a pinch of salt, and brush the fish all over the surface with this, then cover with dried bread crumbs or cracker dust sifted. Place in the oven, and in a few minutes baste with butter. Take up carefully and garnish to taste.

Hurry-Up Salmon Salad.

Pick the bones and skin from a can of salmon. Place some pieces of lettuce on plates, add salmon, cover with mayonnaise and on the top of each portion place two or three portions of hard boiled egg. Garnish the dish with some quarters or slices of lemon. Do not add mayonnaise or other dressing until ready to serve. This is a full meal with some dessert.

Cold Fish.

Serve cold boiled fish for Sunday and hot days. For decorations use cold stuffed eggs, sardines, lettuce, pickles, slices of pickled beets cut in different designs with cutters; also cold chopped whites and yolks of hard boiled eggs or with capers cut in half or whole or asparagus tips. Cover with a thin layer of mayonnaise.

Economical Meat Entrees.

Substantial every day entrees can be made of the cheaper cuts of meat, such as briskets, neck pieces, flank, shoulder cold, ox tails, pig's feet, tripe, etc. Vegetables, to predominate, should be used with these, using the meat sparingly or just enough to produce flavor, as you would with salt and pepper and other condiments. These are economical and are labor savers, because they are generally prepared in one pan, or casserole, or stone crock, or large pressed steel frying pan with a short handle. A large, round metal casserole with two handles is useful for large quantities, that is, from fifteen to fifty persons.

Flank steak, chuck roast, shoulder cold, flank butt, etc., may be prepared so as to equal the best cuts. Request the butcher to bone, skewer, or score—the latter in the case of flank steak. Always take home the trimmings, fat, and bones you pay for to help make the gravy or sauces. Buy 5 or 10 cents worth of suet if fat is scarce. The amount depends upon the size of your family or the number of your guests.

Flank steak scored, seasoned and sauteed eats well. The other meats are best braised or roasted in the oven, and served with potatoes any style, or with a garniture of any kind of vegetables.

Cover the bottom of the roasting pan with slightly melted suet or other fat, add one pint of vegetables, sliced or chopped fine, using carrots, turnips, onions, outside sticks of celery, two or three tomatoes, more or less according to the quantity of meat. Stir to melt suet or until hot, then add the seasoned meat, plain or stuffed—breast of veal or flank steak are fine stuffed. Add one pint to a quart of water, cover pan, and roast to a yellowish brown, basting and turning often. Cook the meat slowly and never allow the pan to dry out. Breast of lamb, or mutton shoulder, or rabbit may be thus cooked.

When the meat is tender, remove from pan to dish into warming closet. Strain the sauce or gravy into a saucepan, cool, and remove grease and save, then boil up the sauce to use when needed. Any leftover may be used in Espagnole sauce or to flavor some soup stock which you want to be heavy.

Never use flour to thicken gravy, because it spoils its flavor, but boil it down to the proper consistency.

As to garniture, use two to four kinds of vegetables. Let potato be one at all times, it saves the bread or wheat. Select as the other vegetables cabbage, or lettuce boiled, or use potato dumplings, boiled onions, spinach, asparagus, spaghetti, macaroni, noodles, rice, yellow split peas, farina dumplings, parsnips stewed or roasted with the meat, egg plant, etc. The lettuce used may be stuffed in order to use up stale bread. Make up the boiled and stuffed lettuce into small balls and cook them in the pan in which the meat is cooked. Stuffed lettuce may be braised in the fat you skim from the gravy.

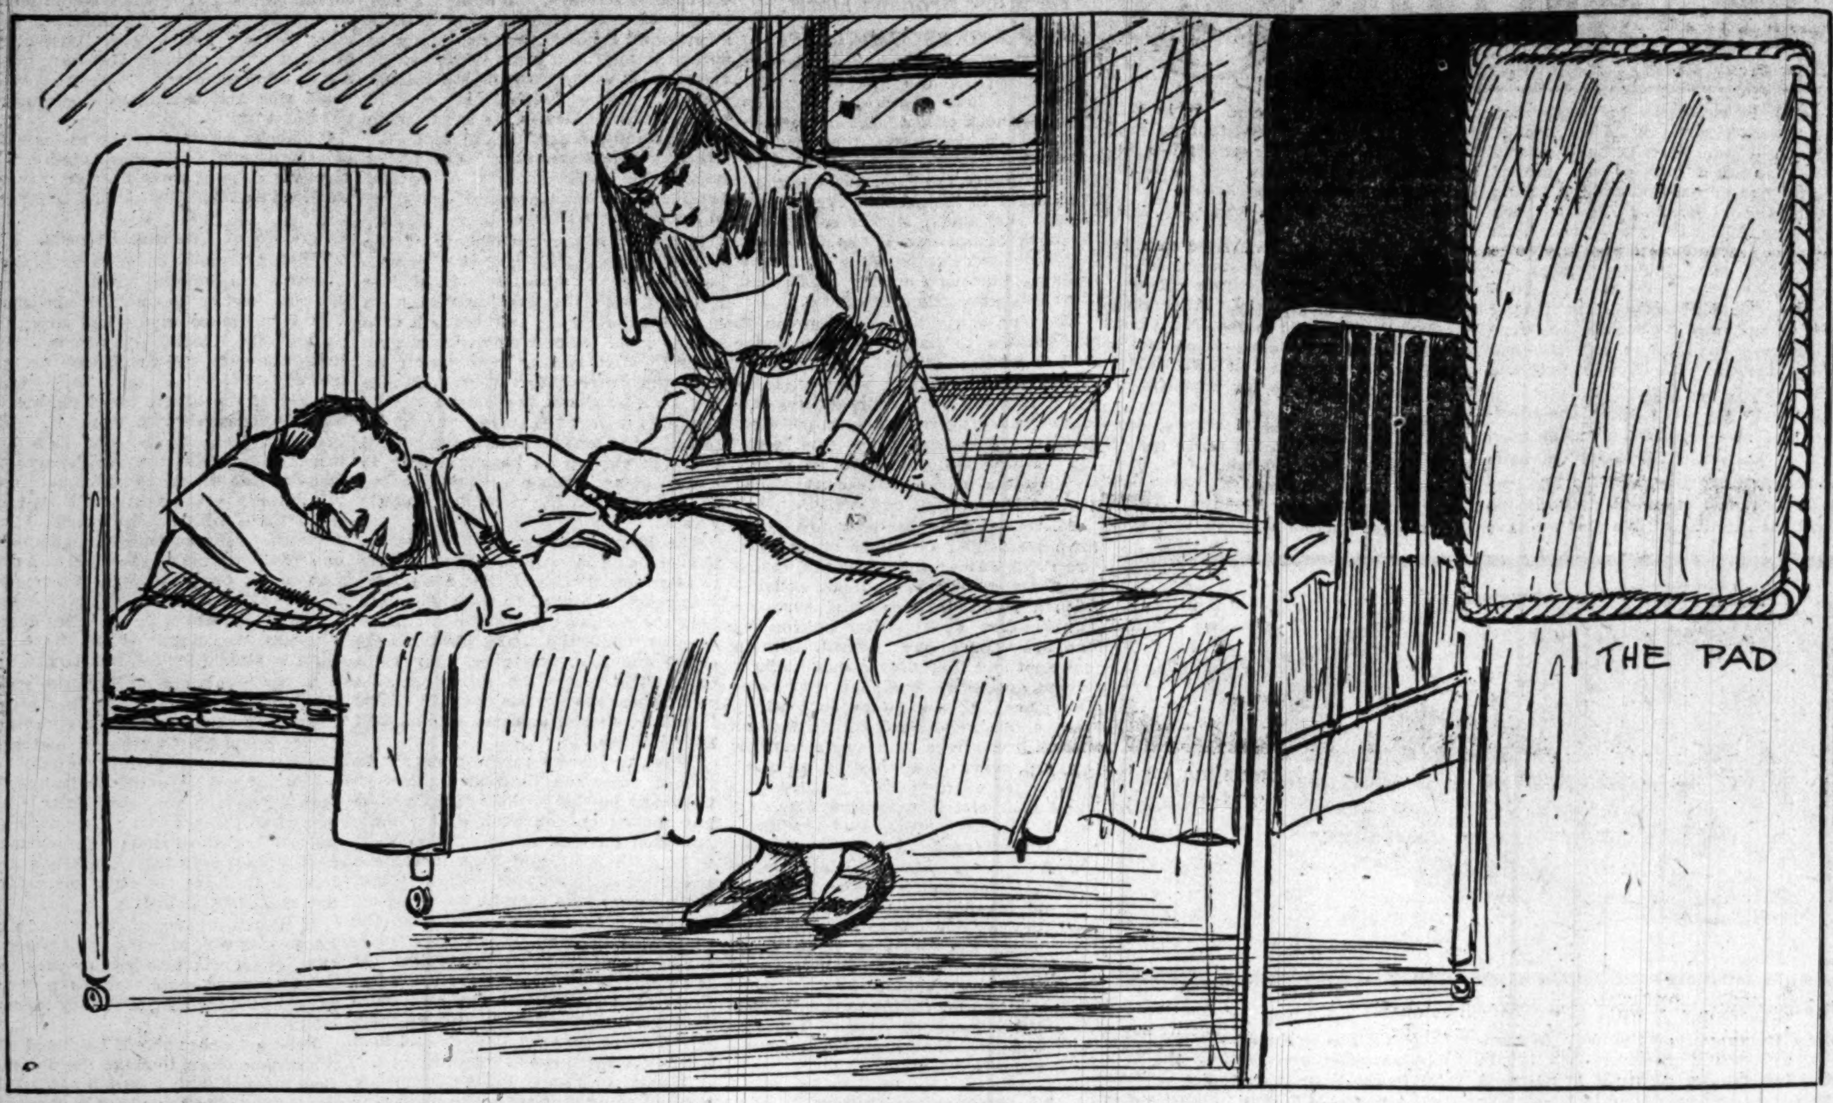
PATRIOTIC and PRACTICAL NEEDLEWORK by Clotilde



BED PAD FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

That we can never be overzealous nor they overstocked with these pads is revealed in a message received from the Paris headquarters at the American fund for the French wounded in Chicago. "We never get enough of them," it ran; "no matter what our supply, the demand seems to be all of that and more."

For the most part pain is the greatest and the hardest thing the men have to combat. Not because of complaints (the men will suffer untold agonies without a murmur) but it doesn't need utterance; their faces tell the tale. Pain reaps its biggest toll when the patients have to be moved.

These pads, slipped between the patient and the bedding, ease the fatigue of long lying in one posture and absorb all blood and other excretions which would otherwise necessitate changing the linen. In the picture here a nurse is seen placing a pad under one of the wounded. She has neatly laid back the clothes and turned the patient on his side. This will probably prevent two or three movings with the inevitable racking pains.

The pads are simply made and require almost no outlay of money. Gauze, absorbent cotton, and newspapers are the materials used. The directions follow:

Cut newspaper 32 by 24 inches, using seven thicknesses. Place a layer of nonabsorbent cotton on the papers, thick in the middle and thin along the edges. On this place thin layer of absorbent cotton, cover with gauze on both sides, overcast all around. Be sure that edges of paper are entirely covered. These pads are also made 16 by 24 inches.

A pad which can be used as a model may be obtained for 20 cents at 60 East Washington street, Chicago, the American fund for the French wounded, where the finished pads may also be sent for foreign shipment.

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are Inclined to "Boss."

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped, addressed envelope.

If your birthday falls during the week beginning today you are still under the influence of the sign Leo (July 22-Aug. 21). You are passionate, independent, inclined to "boss," bold, courageous, and always ready to fight if necessary.

It has been said you are born commanders, rulers, and kings in the material universe as in the realms of the heart, this being your birthright gained through loyalty and the mastery of true obedience. However, this may be, you certainly rank among the best organizers and methodizers of the world. You are also usually capable of exercising authority.

You have a fiery temper, but it is soon over and one whom you love can soon melt you to tenderness. It is easy, too, to make you see a point after the explosion is over and the fragments all swept up. You are persevering. You are bound to dominate, but you can be led if people do not let you know what they are driving at. You would make a tasteful, finished musician, but you want to lead the band.

You have strong psychic power, which you should develop. You are energetic, aspiring, have no use for mediocrity, and are demonstrative in affection. You are faithful to those you love and show them much kindness and sympathy, but you have not much use for those you are indifferent about.

You are loving in your home, and you show it, too. If you are a mother you look out for your children and see that they get their share of "what's going."

You are sometimes pessimistic and inclined to deep depression, which fortunately for you is not of long duration. You are popular, particularly with those near you socially, who set high estimate on your character and ability, which you are perfectly willing they should do.

Although liable to many deep disappointments, things generally turn out fairly well for you, even if not always in the way you prefer. You have a nature that fits you for almost any condition, for as a general thing whatever you find to do you do with all your might. You sometimes adopt another's idea, but its presentation is apt to evolve one of your own, which you may lay aside to adopt the one offered, exploiting it, however, as your own. Your reasoning powers are strong and convincing, for you believe what you are saying—at least while you are saying it.

A marriage with Sagittarius, Nov. 23-Dec. 22, is generally sympathetic and harmonious, also one with Aries, June 22, and Libra, Sept. 24-Oct. 23, are both congenial. But perhaps Aquarius, Jan. 21-Feb. 19, would make you the happiest mate of them all, because of its quiet negative strength and unexcitable nature.

You will be most fortunate during your own sign and the week beginning Jan. 27. Your birthstones are the ruby and the diamond; colors, yellow, red, and green. Professions, decorator, milliner, dressmaker, cook, physician, musician, actor, florist.

Must Not Go Alone.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am anxious to know if it is proper for a girl of 13 to go to moving pictures, etc., with a boy classmate. If so, is it proper to go without a chaperon? N. F. B."

Not alone with the boy. Thirteen is much too young an age to start going to theaters with boys, unless, of course, he comes along in a party that your mother and father might include you in.

Goes with Other Girls.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am writing you to ask your advice. I am in love with a young man who doesn't pay any attention to me. He goes out with other girls that he knows I don't like. We used to go together, and he asked me if I would marry him. I thought I was too young, so I said no. Ever since then he speaks to me and calls once in a while—'just so I won't forget him,' is what he says. My mother is dead, so I am asking you to advise me.

"LONESOME."

My dear child, I wouldn't be unhappy over him if I were you, because it is quite obvious that he is not the man for you. Have him for a friend and let him call once in a while, and in the meantime you go out with other boys when you are invited.

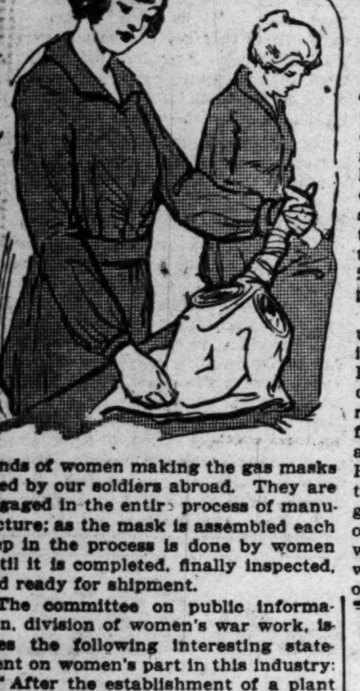
WOMEN MAKING GAS MASKS.

HARDLY a day passes that does not bring to our attention a new line of war work in which women are engaged. They are making themselves actually indispensable in preparing and manufacturing those articles of equipment which are necessary to the safety and comfort of our men in the field.

As an example, today there are thousands of women making the gas masks used by our soldiers abroad. They are engaged in the entire process of manufacture; as the mask is assembled each step in the process is done by women until it is completed, finally inspected, and ready for shipment.



The committee on public information, division of women's war work, issues the following interesting statement on women's part in this industry:

"After the establishment of a plant entirely within the control of the gas defense service as a part of the office of the surgeon general of the United States army, a concerted drive was organized to secure the support and assistance of women of more than average intelligence and education to be utilized in the more important service of process and inspection.

"It soon became apparent that the type of women needed could not be secured through the ordinary channels of employment, so men were sent to investigate localities displaying service flags in an effort to secure the services of mothers, wives, and sisters of men who had been called to the colors. In gathering the necessary force in this manner women thus vitally interested will in all cases be most loyal in their work and extremely anxious to send out perfect gas masks.

"Thousands of women have been employed and the plant is running full speed. Schools have been established to train these selected minds for the minute perfection necessary in an inspection system so complete that no defect of any nature will be passed. These women are organized along military lines. Each woman has been given a course of instruction and intensive training on defective materials before actually being assigned to work in either the operating or inspection division.

"The work has been divided into eight divisions under the direction of a general staff. The divisions were then subdivided into companies in charge of company officers. The company officer was given three platoon officers and six squad leaders. This method of management constantly has kept the military idea before the workers and has accomplished unusual results, both in discipline and in the control of production. Friendly rivalry as to quantity and quality of total output is carried on between the different companies.

"Various methods are used to stimulate production and constant appeal is made to enliven patriotic impulse. Lectures are given sometimes by soldiers who have but recently experienced the horrors of actual gas warfare. Motion pictures loaned by the allied governments showing how the Hun uses the deadly gas fumes and the troops actually in action during a gas attack are shown each week. No opportunities are lost to impress these women with the extreme value of the work to the life and fighting power of our forces."

A HOMELESS BACHELOR.

I WAS 40 years old and a bachelor with no particular "home." An engineer on a steam railroad, frequently transferred from one route to another, I never made real friends, for hardly did I get to know a person when I'd be shifted to some other route and the friend would drop.

Then one day the chief transferred me to the switch yards in Chicago and I have been there ever since. That is how I got to know little Charlie and his sister Mamie. They came scouting around the yards for stray bits of coal and wood and naturally I got to talking to the kiddies, who, like other youngsters, told me their whole history, the trouble their mamma was having since daddy died, and how hard up they were.

I got into the habit of going about the yards picking up stray pieces of fuel and piling them up for the children, and one day when they came I had such a pile ready that I had to send the children back for a larger basket. Ten minutes later they returned with a bushel basket, and with them came a woman, whom Charlie proudly informed me was their mamma.

I'll never forget the impression I received, as clumsily I took my cap off my head and bowed to the sweet faced, homey looking mother. Somehow she reminded me of my own mother, one who, having suffered much, resigned patiently to what fate had waiting for her.

The basket filled, gruffly I insisted on carrying it home for them, and when we got to the little broken down cottage Charlie's mother had the table set for supper and insisted on my sitting down with them, and there in my dirty clothing, hands just half washed, I enjoyed the meal of a real mother.

After that I often carried bushel baskets of fuel picked up around the yards over to Charlie's, as I was wont to call their home. Then I often came up on Sunday afternoons to play with the children and take them to the movies. Slowly I became aware that I came to see other than the children, that my eyes were elsewhere.

I'll confess that when I married Charlie's mother I did not actually love her; I wanted to make life easier for her; to help bring up the children to whom I became closely attached, but as time went on I couldn't describe my feelings. Love had crept into our lives and brought happiness to us as well as the children. And not a year back I had looked at life with a shiver, feeling that I was to remain a bachelor lonely, deserted all the rest of my life!

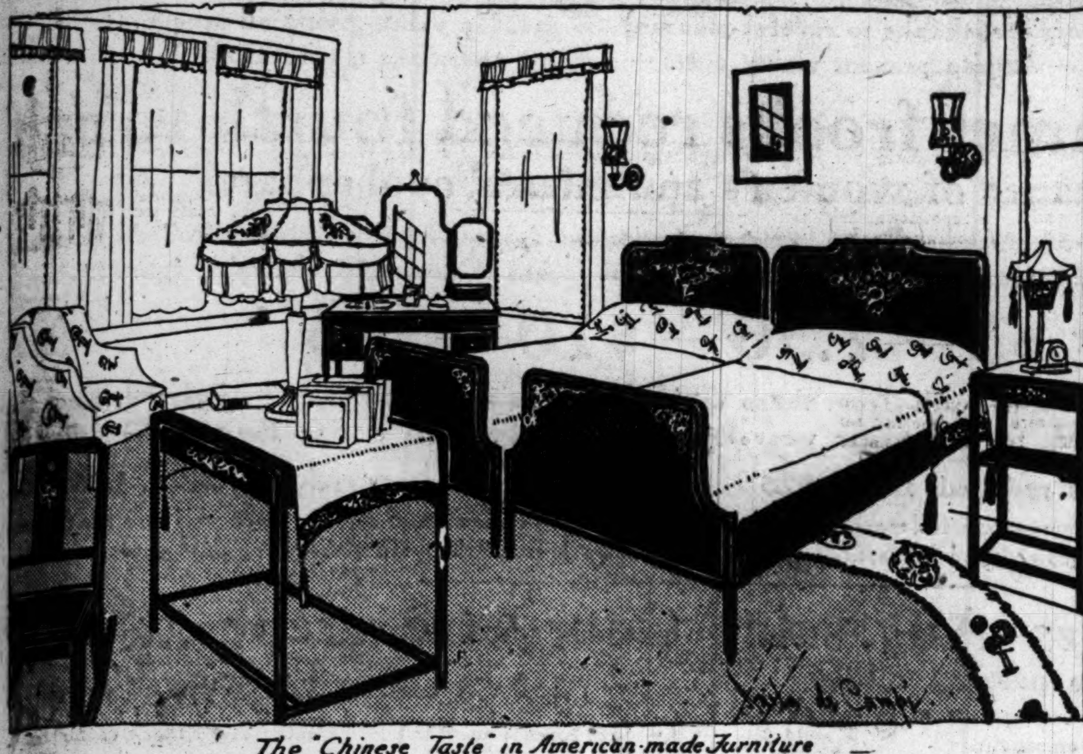
The HOME HARMONIOUS

by Anita de Campi



The "Chinese Taste" in American-made Furniture

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

SOMETIMES a fad occurs, one might almost aver, by preconcerted agreement between manufacturers of all sorts of things, so hard is it to distinguish the leader from the flock of followers. This is true of the unprecedented rage for any and everything in "the Chinese taste" this season. We find it paramount in all departments—rugs, furniture, draperies, wallpaper, china, embroideries, and accessories.

A peculiarity of the new fashion is that it is not by any means pure Chinese, but a modification that in every instance nicely adapts it to American uses.

Chinese rugs are enjoying phenomenal favor and they are really lovely with their broad undecorated spaces, delicately ornamented here and there and beautifully shaped and bordered. They differ from the Japanese in every way, the principal advantage being in the quality of wool used in the making.

Prices, style, sizes, and colors vary widely in the Chinese rugs. It is interesting to have an idea of comparative values. A Japanese cotton hand woven rug nine by twelve in size can be had for $50; a domestic rug of the same size and quality will cost $110, a Chinese $100.

The most popular shapes are the oval and round, and prices range from a hundred to thousands of dollars. The latter, of course, are mostly museum pieces. A set of three rugs now in this country are the pictorial rugs showing the winter palaces of the Chinese empress. These rugs are all carved and tooled in embossed effect, and show a regular landscape, trees, water front, temple roofs made of colored tile in the distance, the sacred dog Fu (a pair of him) guarding the palace entrance, etc. They are practically priceless.

On the other hand, Austrian tufted rugs, which were so well liked before the war and which are now in disfavor, have been supplanted and excelled indeed by the Chinese plain carpeting, that is made hand tufted and comes in all widths up to eighteen feet. It is sold by the square yard, cut on the yard. At present this splendid, thick, velvety carpet stuff comes in but one color called "mole." It is a shade of taupe with a slight wistaria tinge, a tint that is nicely neutral and goes well with almost anything.

Domestic carpeting is carried out in a variety of Chinese patterns. The best is a Chinese wall pattern; that is, an all over fret work, giving a diapered effect, in black lines on a colored ground. The rice pattern, too, is good, especially for hall and stair carpeting.

An interesting feature of the Chinese work is that nearly all of the decorative motifs are religious symbols, that not only fascinate the eye but charm the imagination; even the names are poetical—"The Endless Wheel," "The Knot of Eternity," "The Conch Shell," "The State Parasol," "The Deer and the Bat," "The Sign of Good Fortune," etc. There are nine altogether; the others are worth finding out and memorizing by sight and title, for they are repeated endlessly.

Beautiful brocades with designs of fans, Chinese characters, and dragons, woven at the rate of a few inches a day, go well, of course, with Chinese rugs. While the majority of the silks and embroideries are Japanese, for the Japanese now lead the world in the production of silk brocades, the character of the work is Chinese, for it is well known that the Japanese first learned the secret of silk weaving from four Chinese girls who were smuggled into the country after the secret of silk culture had been maintained by China for 3,000 years.

Among a few successful American rooms done in Chinese character is a bedroom with twin beds and other furniture in light gold lacquer, resting on delicate stands of teakwood. The floor covering is of the mole carpeting already described, and two standard lamps have mortar shaped silk shades in apricot silk, with mauve and green tassels. The wall is gilded and then covered with thin rice paper. The chair seats are covered with cushions in gold and light oriental scarlet silk.

The coloring in the accompanying illustration is characteristic. The carpet is in a golden fawn color with ornamental wistaria border, showing other colors in the border pattern. The furniture is prune colored lacquer. The large lamp shade is red and yellow, with green tassels, while the smaller shades are light dull blue. The bed covers are of changeable silk in orange and mauve, with dull orange colored satin strips folded to the pillows, the satin brocaded with green and mauve flowers, well scattered, and weighted at the corners with mauve tassels.

A good decorators' water color drawing shows a living room fitted with well proportioned teakwood furniture, lighter in scale than the usual run of teakwood. The pieces are American made of imported wood. The wall covering is imported highly "yellowed" Chinese paper, that comes in scenic sections. The large rug is a mustard colored one, designed in this country and made in China.

A good feature of the room is a boxlike radiator cover of open work teakwood that hides the low radiator and is also used as a window seat. On it is a brocaded pad and two brocaded pillows.

The window draperies are of striped old blue and mustard raw silk. Two tall pedestals flanking the window are made of slender pieces of teakwood put together in open work design. On one is a vase of tender yellow glazed pottery and on the other a similar vase in apple green.

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES.

MRS. B. W.: Use an old blue damask cushion in your cane chair. A pale putty would be your best wall coloring. Place an old gold piece under your lamp. It would be all right to have books and blocks on the table. The table must be placed according to the space you have. I should prefer the gate leg. Yes, a fernery would be nice. Be sure to get a self-watering one. Use gold colored silk gauze for your curtains; these may be used without overdrapes or undercurtains. Damask for the portieres. Your solid yellow vase would be right, especially if all of your blues are slightly violet tinged, as old blues are. Would you like the bedroom in old ivory and light yellow with just a touch of blue? Have the curtains alike throughout, and the walls in the dining room and living room alike.

MRS. J. H.: It is not really necessary to have a tray. The most popular thing is to have a glass cover over the whole dresser top. If your dresser is small you have enough on it. Toilet articles are kept on the dressing table. I do think your choice has been in good taste. Use a bench rather than a chair at your dressing table. Deep rose for your dining room shades. Yes, white things can be dipped cream color.

* *

MRS. E. J. P.: Let your walls be of light putty color and use linenized cretonne casement curtains printed on pale putty ground and showing a light mulberry, leaf green, and mahogany brown on the pattern. Choose a bronze brown rug and select cottage furniture for your spare bedroom. This can be finished in old ivory.

W. S.: I should advise you to have your ceiling old ivory throughout. With the things that you have I believe the putty color will be the best for your side walls. Select a paper in small self-colored pattern. I do not see how you can possibly harmonize red carpet with the deep rose colored. Perhaps it is that that "gets on your nerves." Perhaps you could have your portieres dyed taupe. This color goes well with almost anything. Line these portieres with linenized cretonne in large, striking design, repeating the other colors in the room. Interline your portieres and weight them well at the bottom. Substitute a silk shade in your dining room in place of the glass globe.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE

BY RHETA CHILDE DORR

SHOULD you happen to be in Paris or in any other French city in the early spring you will witness an amusing and at the same time inspiring sight: the carnival of the military class of the year before going into training camps.

France has lived next door to a burglar nation for nearly half a century. Ever since Alsace-Lorraine was stolen from her in 1871, France has known this, and she has therefore retained the system of compulsory military service.

Every year on the 18th of April all able bodied young Frenchmen who have reached the age of 20 go up for a two years' military training. Just before the war the term was lengthened to three years. Their term completed, they are placed in the reserves, ready at any time to mobilize and to fight.

The world well remembers how in late July, 1914, the tocsin sounded all over France, calling from field and factory, counting room and office the glorious citizen army that rushed out against the barbarian invasion, turned it at the Marne, and saved the life of civilization.

I believe that after this war some form of compulsory military service will be enacted in this country. Let us rather call it required military service, since in a democracy such service is agreed upon as a wise policy and is not forced on the people without their consent. The American form might well be something like that of France

They Like It.

Proof that military service there is not in the least oppressive is the gayety with which the young cadets greet their term of training. It has long been the custom for the year's class to make a carnival of its going. Beginning two or three weeks before the date set for their encampment, groups of these lads, fantastically arrayed and decorated, would parade through the streets, singing their favorite choruses, making a great deal of noise between songs, shouting and chaffing the passersby.

No youth considered himself properly dressed without a huge boutonniere, sometimes of flowers but oftener a paper monstrosity as big as a cabbage. Sometimes a lad appeared with a buttonhole bouquet of vegetables. Anything for a joke. Thus dressed, furnished with a guitar or an accordion, the "bunch," as our slang would call them, fared forth to have a last good time before going under discipline. For the time being they owned the town, and nobody complained of their noise or their pranks.

Retain Old Custom.

I had seen this before the war, but I was unprepared to see the custom retained. Yet this April in Paris, in Bordeaux, and several other cities I saw the same singing groups, the same absurd decorations, the same fun making. The class of 1918 was younger than the class of 1914, but it was every bit as exuberant. Four years of war and desolation, of sickening anxiety and cruel bereavement, were powerless to depress the spirit of young France.

Early on the morning of April 18 I started on a journey from the Orleans station, and there, filling the place with laughter and excited conversation, I saw about a hundred of the class of 1918 leave for their cantonment.

Their mothers and fathers and sweethearts were there seeing them off, just as we have been seeing our boys off to training camp this year. But these French fathers and mothers have suffered bitter losses. Hardly a family in France that has not known bereavement. Most of the women I saw that April morning wore deep mourning.

After Four Years.

Even though they wept in their hearts, they sent their boys away with laughter and brave cheer. With bantering words on their lips, their hearts were saying: "O France, loved mother, take one more of my sons. Like those who have died, he was mine only until you needed him more."

Their train left the station ahead of mine, and until it was far down the line these great fathers and mothers continued to wave and cheer. Then they clasped hands and silently went home.

After four years of war. It made me ashamed of every wavering moment I have allowed myself since we entered this conflict.

This is a time when the women of America must take stock of themselves, when they must consider whether or not they have grown up to the stature of the women overseas; whether they can keep step with the men who have gone over to fight beside the French, English, Belgian, and Italian soldiers. For those women of the world war are very great in mind and spirit. Those young Americans are growing fast. They will never be the same again.

New Race of Men.

We sing about keeping the home fires burning "till the boys come home." But we have got to face one big fact. When the boys come home they will have become men, and men of a totally different type than any to which we have been accustomed. They will be bigger, broader, finer, in body and mind. They will be better educated. They will expect more of their women.

In the first place, our men, when they come home, will be such perfect physical specimens that they will be astonished to see women who are flat chested, or fat, sallow skinned, or heavy eyed. They won't have much patience with indigestion and headaches. That kind of thing goes with slacking over there.

There ought to be a great big, earnest health movement among women in this country during the rest of the war. We see signs of it in the farmerettes, the campers, the women police.

The men in France are learning new things every day. They have traveled. They have had a chance to compare their country with others, their compatriots with other people.

Build "For Keeps."

We have been called a nation of boasters. We boasted of our achievements because most of us never had a chance to see anything of the achievements of other nations. These men have.

They know now that French cities are often far more beautiful than American cities. If they lack skyscrapers they have ancient castles and chateaux. What the French build they build beautifully and for the ages.

A young engineer over there told me how when the Americans began to double track the French railways and to build the miles on miles of switches necessary to handle trainloads of supplies for the armies, the French were shocked at the shoddy work done.

"You know how it is with us," he said. "When we are doing a hurry job in laying rails we drive spikes in every other tie. The French drive them twice in every tie and they rivet them after they are driven through. We do that now, over here. The French won't stand for anything else. They say they won't risk railroad accidents for their troops."

We Learn Humility.

You never hear any boasting from Americans in France. Our men are learning humility. They know that we do some things well, but they know that we have much to learn from the older civilizations, and they are out to learn.

Our men are getting a wonderful education, not only through their army experience and their faculties of observation, but through the Y. M. C. A. department of lectures and entertainment. At first the idea was simply to entertain the men in their leisure hours, to furnish music and moving pictures and vaudeville. But the men themselves soon called for better things, and the Y. M. C. A. is preparing to give what amounts almost to university extension courses in the camps.

This spring Anson Phelps Stokes, secretary of Yale university, went to France, and was made head of the committee on education in the Y. M. C. A. in the field. Mr. Stokes made a thorough canvass of the situation, visiting many camps, consulting with army authorities and with the men themselves. He visited the camps and canteens of the English Y. M. C. A. in order to compare their work with ours.

Chances to Learn.

The program of education was not complete when I left, but I saw a tentative plan which by this time must have been worked into something truly admirable. The men of our army are going to be given a real, practical education. Those behind the lines who wish to continue a college or technical course, dropped when the draft law went into effect, will be able to do so. Those whose early education was neglected will have a chance to go back to elementary school.

Men who do not care to take up any serious studies will hear lectures, if they choose, in which they will learn a great deal about French and English history. In the very region, perhaps the very town, where great events of history took place, they will hear the story told. The past will become real. It will help our men to understand the present.

Men Eager to Improve.

I know that our soldiers are thirsty for this kind of an education. I was asked by the Y. M. C. A. to lecture in some of the camps on what I saw of the Russian revolution. It was with great reluctance that I agreed to try one lecture. It did not seem possible for me that soldiers, tired with the day's labor, would care to listen to such a subject.

"I will try it once or even twice, if you like," I told the secretary, "but I'm afraid it won't get across."

It did. I spoke something like thirty times, and every time to crowded rooms. I spoke in sheds, tents, theatres, town halls, and even in the open. I never had such audiences. Their eyes were keen and bright and they drank in every word. Afterward they crowded around asking questions.

These men are not going to be interested in women who never read anything but novels and the cheap magazines, who know nothing about geography or history or politics. They will want to talk over their experiences with their mothers, and sisters, and wives, and if they cannot listen intelligently the men are going to be disappointed.

Proud of Their Women.

Hundreds of soldiers with whom I talked showed me pictures of their women at home. They said loving things, proud things, but the women they were the proudest of were those who were doing some kind of real war service. "My sister Elizabeth is the head of the Red Cross canteen at the union station in my town. They feed hundreds of men every time a troop train goes through."

"My wife is pretty busy these days, with the children and her surgical dressings classes."

These are the things the men like to think of their women doing while they are away. They see the women workers in the canteens of the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. in France. They see nurses and women ambulance drivers working regardless of weariness, careless of danger. They see all around them unselfish, courageous service. The spirit is in the air over there, and the men like to feel that their women at home are like that, too.

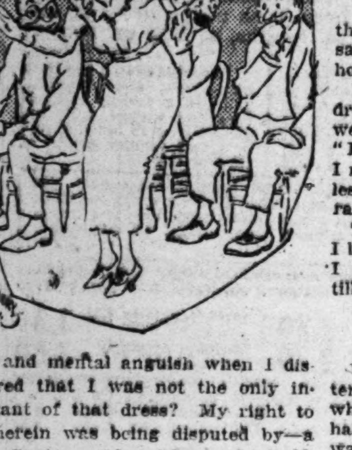
Expect More from Women.

When the boys come home they want to come back to women who have been born again into high and noble patriotism. "Not only hats off to the flag. Sleeves up for the flag." That slogan, adopted by the men in the steel industries who are speeding up the building of ships, ships, and more ships, is the patriotism our men are living every day in France, and it is the kind they have a right to expect of the women at home.

My Most Embarrassing Moment.

The Scratching Speaker.

My most painful as well as most embarrassing moment was when I once occupied the speaker's platform with six men. I being the only woman, I had a new frock for the occasion, an airy fairy thing that made me feel I was at my best. But not for long. How can I describe my physical torture and mental anguish when I discovered that I was not the only inhabitant of that dress? My right to be therein was being disputed by—a flea! Squirm and writhe as I would, and pat and smooth with my hands, I could not persuade that flea to leave nor yet to dwell with me in harmony.



To leave the platform was out of the question and when in a few minutes my address was called I was frankly and plebeianly scratching!

When Wilton Read the Poem.

This happened many years ago in a little backwoods school. My father was a deacon of the little church and always entertained the presiding elder. I admired the elder much and tried to imitate him in my reading and talking.

I was the big boy of the school. One day we were worrying through what was to us something difficult, a poem in McGuffey's Reader.

The rest of the class had stumbled through and the teacher turned to me, saying: "Come, Wilton, now show us how this should be read."

I rose with the air of the elder addressing the meeting and started. All went well till I came to the fatal line, "For I'm but a useless cumberer here," I read out loudly: "For I'm but a useless cucumber here." The laugh that ran through the little schoolroom.

That was years ago, but never have I been more humiliated than that day. I didn't hear the last of cucumbers till we moved to another state.

Stopping for Water.

We lived quite a ways from the center of town and had an old family horse which we drove a good deal. About half way home, just around a corner, was a watering trough where we always stopped. I also had a bicycle which I used occasionally, and one day I solemnly rode my wheel around the corner and up to the trough and had dismounted before I realised what I was doing. I dared not glance around to see who was watching me, but began to look on the ground as if I had come to search for something lost.

ETIQUETTE

by ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER

WHEN THE HAT COMES OFF.

"OFF again, on again," might well be the slogan of the hat of a well bred man, for besides being raised whenever a feminine friend is greeted—the only kind of headgear allowed to remain comfortably in place on such an occasion being that of a man in uniform, when a salute is in order—there are many other times during the day when it must be removed, temporarily, at least, in response to the dictates of Dame Grundy.

If a man but hesitates to chat a moment with one of the fairer sex he is lost. Off must come his hat, to stay so until the woman in the case goes on or mercifully begs him not to run the risk of catching cold.

Then there are those anti-comfortable but necessary conveniences, the elevators [God bless 'em!], which fill many an easy going man's heart with dread. In an office building—unless with a woman—he may remain in blissful seclusion with nothing on his mind but his hat (in the parlance of the day) until his floor is reached, safe from unfavorable criticism. But if he have wife, daughter, sweetheart, or any other woman with him, or if he but enter the elevator of a department store, hotel, or club where there are women present, in the words of the red queen, "Off with his head!"—only today it is his hat instead of his head.

A man who does not offer his seat in a crowded car to a woman standing is negligent, and one who does not rise when spoken to or approached by a member of the so-called "restless" sex is immediately labeled boorish, but he who disobeys these overhead rulings is either too ignorant or too careless to live and move among courteous people.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply, inclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

G. H. J.: If your mother knows and approves, there is no reason why you should not go automobiling with your young friend for a short time on a pleasant evening. Modern girls are quite capable of being trusted if they act in a womanly and discreet manner, I am sure. It is the girl who is silly with the boys who makes our chaperonage rules imperative.

* *

F. D. L.: It is cosutomary for the woman to tell her companion what she wishes for dinner or luncheon (in a restaurant), and then to let him give the order to the waiter. A polite man, as you say, always allows a woman to be seated first, whether she precedes him to the table or not.

Mid-Summer Items of the Shows and Showmen

Joseph Urban, who put blue paint into the Follies, will continue to do so this season, although the Shuberts, et cetera, have been after him to tint their productions with his languorous indigoes. Mr. Urban's brushes will be confined to canvases owned by K. & E. Ziegfeld and Dillingham.

"Take It from Me" is now the name of the Sanderson-Cawthorn-Crawford musical comedy, telling the story of the curio dealer who swallowed the diamond. Shows entitled "I'll Say" and "What D'ye Know About That" are in prospect.

Conrad Nagel, who was the reformed bad boy in "The Man Who Came Back," will play with Miss Alice Brady tomorrow night at Long Branch in "Forever After." Owen Davis of the Harvard school of melodrama is the author.

So patriotic are Miss Dorothy Dorr and Miss Amelia Bingham that they refuse longer to play the Hun landlady in "The Man Who Stayed at Home." Miss Rose Coghlan will take over the rôle.

When "Seven Days' Leave" reaches the Garrick the leading part will be acted by Miss Jean Stuart, familiar here as a motion picture player and as the naughty Tirza in "The Wanderer," the pulpit's delight.

Mr. Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," a principal N. Y. rendezvous for local and visiting jays ("y," Mr. Compositor, not "g"), will be sent over the realm as a stage show commencing in October. It is booked for a long run in Chicago.

A practical student of the theater and a graduate from Prof. Clark's Harvard school of the drama writes to THE TRIBUNE his plausible belief that the producer destined to lead the American stage ere long is A. H. Woods.

The new ventures of Winchell Smith and John L. Golden this year will be "Three Wise Men" and "Flying Colors," by Salisbury Field, and Mr. Golden, and "Lightnin'," by Mr. Smith and Frank Bacon, who is the star of it. The firm's "Turn to the Right" will play at the Olympic Aug. 25.

Fred Stone will arrive here from the movie fields Aug. 27 to meet his "Jack o' Lantern" company in rehearsal at the Colonial. He has been on the coast making a photo-show about circus life.

The author of "De Luxe Annie," Edward Clark, has written another one, "Not with My Money," in which Miss Lucille Watson and William Morris will perform.

Almost a million dollars' worth of soldiers' smileage has been sold, and thirty-one attractions have bean booked for the thirty-two Liberty theaters in the various cantonments.

"Toddling Over the Rhine with Todd" is a new war anthem by George Cohan, dedicated to Capt. B. R. T. Todd of the Three Hundred and Twenty-fourth Infantry.

Mrs. George A. Hibbard, wife of an ex-mayor of Boston, is appearing in the May Vokes rôle of "Good Gracious Annabelle."

The benefit last Monday at Cohan's Grand for the Lights, an actors' organization of New York, made a profit of $1,000—almost as much, it is surmised, as a benefit for a Chicago club would get in New York.

Mr. Kaufman, dramatic editor of the New York Times, suggests that a play entitled "Seven Up," by Stuart Walker's lady press agent, is too similar to a drama of his own, submitted last year to several managers. He threatens to fetch a lawsuit against Mrs. Walker.

Sir:
Touchin' on an' appertainin' to the lack of masculine wallop in such elfin ditties as, "Dear Lord, Don't Let the Cooties Bite My Popper," I announce my latest contribution to the cantatas of the cantonments. There are no nighties or talcum powders in it. The title is, "If He Leans a Little Toward the Kaiser, We'll Lean Him Up Against the Wall."
Oak Park, Ill. —Herbert Moore.

The government's mobilization of the nation's jokes into a joke book for the soldiers will be aided by the Majestic theater. Every vaudeville wheeze or caper deemed fit for the fighters is being conscripted by the management and forwarded to the military authorities.

Miss Dorothy Miller, the young granddaughter of Dr. Louis Falk, the Chicago organist, has joined the Ziegfeld "Follies" in New York. She sings and dances.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—In the second act of "Allegiance," which is the first important war play of the season—important in its promise if not in its achievement—the son of the Hartmann family makes the decision that has been worrying him for several months, which is to enlist with the Canadians and fight for liberty against the Germans, from whose race the sprung.

The incident that urges this decision upon him is the sinking of the Lusitania. Before that he had, out of respect for his father's prejudices, father being strongly pro-German, and through fear of causing unnecessary suffering to his grandfather, who was German born; and his mother, who wanted to be a loyalist but didn't know just how—before that he had tried to remain decently neutral.

But when he saw the accounts of the Lusitania sinking he could stand no more and bolted. The situation in his family at that moment was rather exciting. The news of the sinking had caused grandfather also to declare himself. He had come from Saxony, he recited, struggling against a threatened stroke of apoplexy, many years before. He had come because living conditions in the dear old fatherland were just then not to his liking. There was no chance for a young man to live decently, no chance for him to make a decent wage, no hope of his ever becoming anything but a clod of earth over which the junkers and the militarists walked.

In America he had found peace, plenty, and finally prosperity. He had sent for his betrothed and they had been married. Then, or before, he had become a citizen of the country and taken his oath to uphold it in every crisis. Was he, now that the test had come, to forget that oath? Was he, because a part of his old heart was still in Saxony, to fail his adopted country in the hour of its greatest need of him? No, by himmel, he was not. And so he declared himself and escaped the stroke, though he never was the same man again.

The boy's father, however, took a different view. He had never lived in Germany and he spoke the language so imperfectly good Germans could hardly understand him. Yet he was strong for the kaiser and for the German war lords. The noble traditions of the Teutons were an abiding inspiration with him. "I stand with the country in which the roots of my family tree are planted," said he, or words to that effect. And as for the Lusitania, what right had those silly women and children to sail on her anyway? They might have known something would happen!

The mother for her part tried still to be neutral. She did not want her home upset; she did not want to take sides, and she resented with great emotional effect being forced to choose between the pro-ally son and the pro-German husband. But if decide she must she would cast her lot with the lad and wish him luck. For, after all was said, she, too, was an American woman—American born, American reared.

During the time that is permitted to elapse between the second and third acts America has grown weary of watchful waiting and joined the fray. The Hartmann boy, word has come from the front, is in a German prison camp. The grandfather has died. The father has continued, furtively, to help Boy-Ed and Von Papen with the financing of German propaganda in America, growing pale of countenance and gray of hair under the strain, and the mother has learned to keep her mouth shut and hope for the best. War is a forbidden subject in the Hartmann house.

And then suddenly there is a second upheaval. Father Hartmann is suspected. He is being watched by the intelligence division of the military. He is known to have held secret meetings with German spies. He has contributed money to their various funds. And in his very hand he holds a secret document that he has agreed to deliver to Graf von Geier, as sinister a son of satan as ever worked the will of the high command.

Carefully he places the papers in the drawer of his desk; carefully he locks the drawer; tremulously he withdraws the key, and as strenuously departs from the house, denying that he is nervous, or worried, or tired, or expectant, or depressed.

Comes then an agent of the United States secret service, a talkative juvenile but still a skilled sleuth, for immediately he is handed a harmless letter written by Graf von Geier to Herr Hartmann he suspects it bears a message in code. To prove himself right he soaks the letter in water, and, holding it against the lamp, reads the fateful words: Von Geier, supposed to be in Chicago, where he had joined the American army and been given a captain's commission, is on his way to New York and is that night to take possession of the document in the drawer of the desk.

What to do? That paper must be recovered at all hazards! But how? Not by opening the drawer, for there are no keys! Not by breaking up the desk with a hatchet, because it is a very nice desk, and if it were all splintered up it might look suspicious! How, then? Ah, by shooting the lock off the desk with father's revolver! Which the loyal wife does.

Then there is the struggle to keep it, for on investigation it proves to be a list of all the chief German spies at work in America, including that of her husband. There is a struggle, of course, and for a time it seems reasonable that the emboldened Von Geier will take it from her. But the young secret service agent has summoned help, and the day is saved. Being a friend of the family, he reports that the list was voluntarily surrendered by Hartmann himself, which clears that situation.

But what of the loyal son? As an exchanged prisoner he is on his way home. In the midst of the excitement over the papers he arrives—and he is stone blind. A German surgeon had "operated" on him before he was exchanged. On this pathetic dénouement the curtain falls.

A play, as you may see, that contains a fair quota of melodramatic thrills, rather strained at times, and unreasonably bold in its reaching for obvious effects. But an interesting play while you are under the spell of it. The Prince and Princess Troubetskoy are its authors, the princess, as you know, being Amelie Rives, the novelist. William Faversham and Maxine Elliott have produced it, though neither acts in it. The opening night Mr. Faversham directed the stage from in back of the scenes and Miss Elliott sat in a stage box, with Miss Margaret Wilson, the president's daughter, as her guest. The leading parts are played by Blanche Yurka, gaining fame in the east as a brilliant young emotionalist; Harrison Hunter, who is the satanic German spy; Carl Anthony, the pro-German husband; Charles Meredith, the upstanding son, and Carl Sauerman, the grandfather.

One of the incidents of wartime New York that passed without general notice, save by those few hundreds who were witness to it, occurred in Forty-second street one day last week.

The Marine band from Pelham Bay, where the sailor boys prepare for service, came parading down the street from Broadway. By the side of the bandmaster there walked a nattily attired young women wearing the uniform of the jackies modified to meet the requirements of a jackiette. The band arrived opposite the headquarters of the recruiting division and the marching lady disappeared to reappear a moment later in the window of the offices on the third floor.

Next door they are building a theater, this one to be the Selwyn, which Jane Cowl is prepared to open with éclat and a new play in October—and over the entrance to the theater they have erected the usual steel awning to shield the crowd that usually gathers outside of a New York theater to watch the first night crew gather and greet itself.

Evidently it occurred to the young woman that if she stepped out upon this awning she could be seen by more of the gathering crowd in the street. She mentioned it to some one in the office; also to the workmen who had put off finishing their lunches until they had satisfied their curiosity as to what was happening. With the aid of a couple of husky sailors and a bricklayer or two she stepped on to the awning roof, bowed good naturedly to the crowd, and prepared to sing. The band struck up the national anthem and she sang it wonderfully. There was a riot of applause when she had finished and those who had uncovered their heads put their hats back the better to clap their hands. She was Alma Gluck of the Metropolitan opera house, and many records. Also she is a duly elected yeowoman of the service.

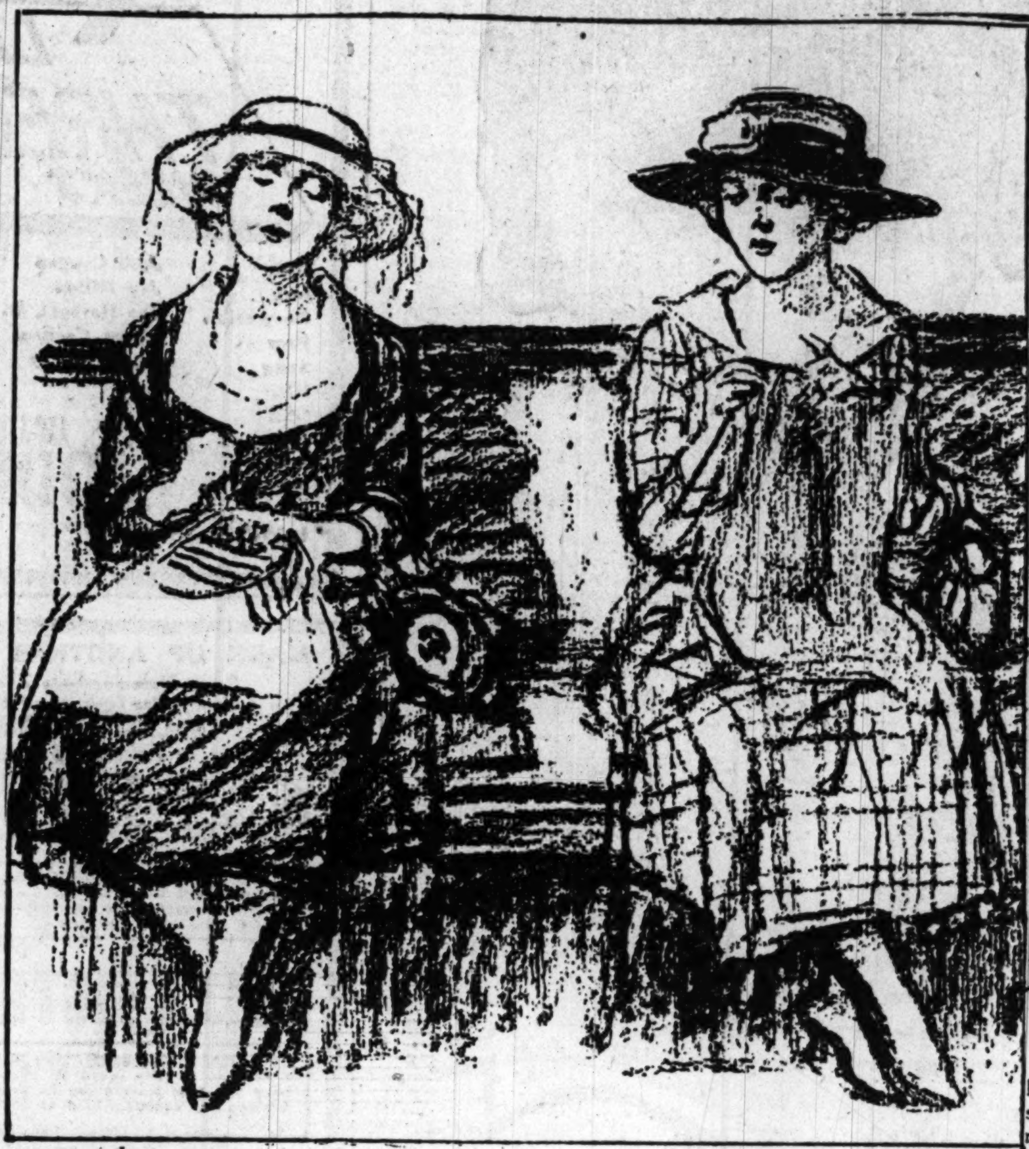
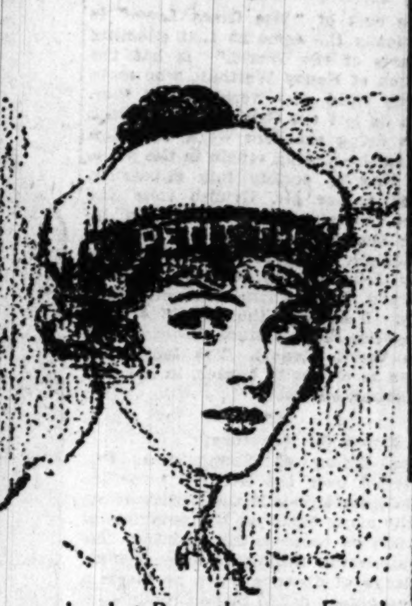
AMONG US MORTALS

WITH THE STAY AT HOMES

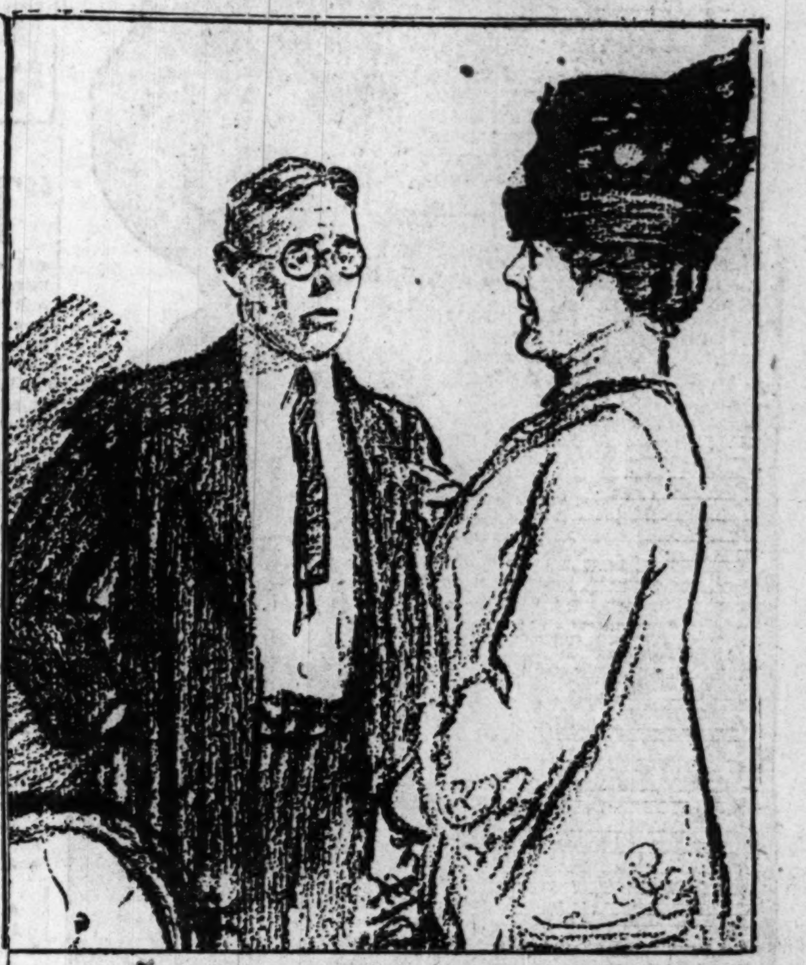
By W. E. HILL



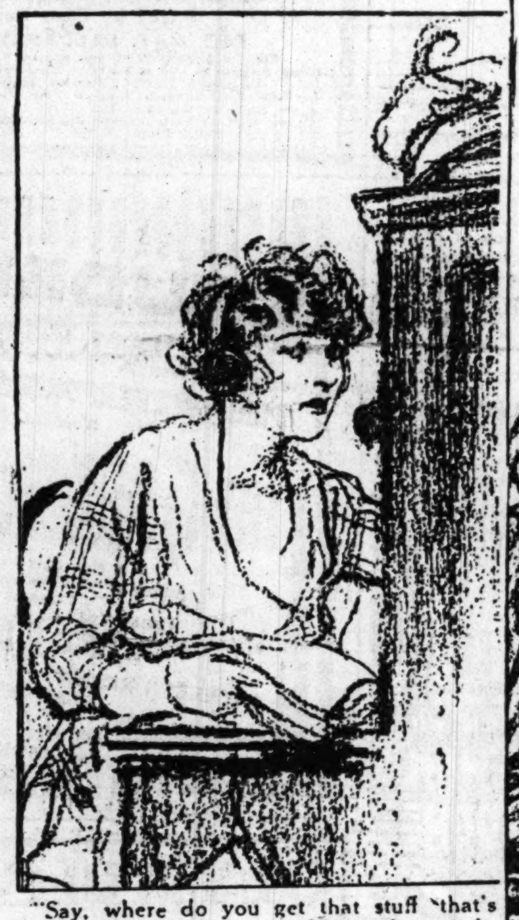
In the station waiting room—showing two kinds of patriotism.



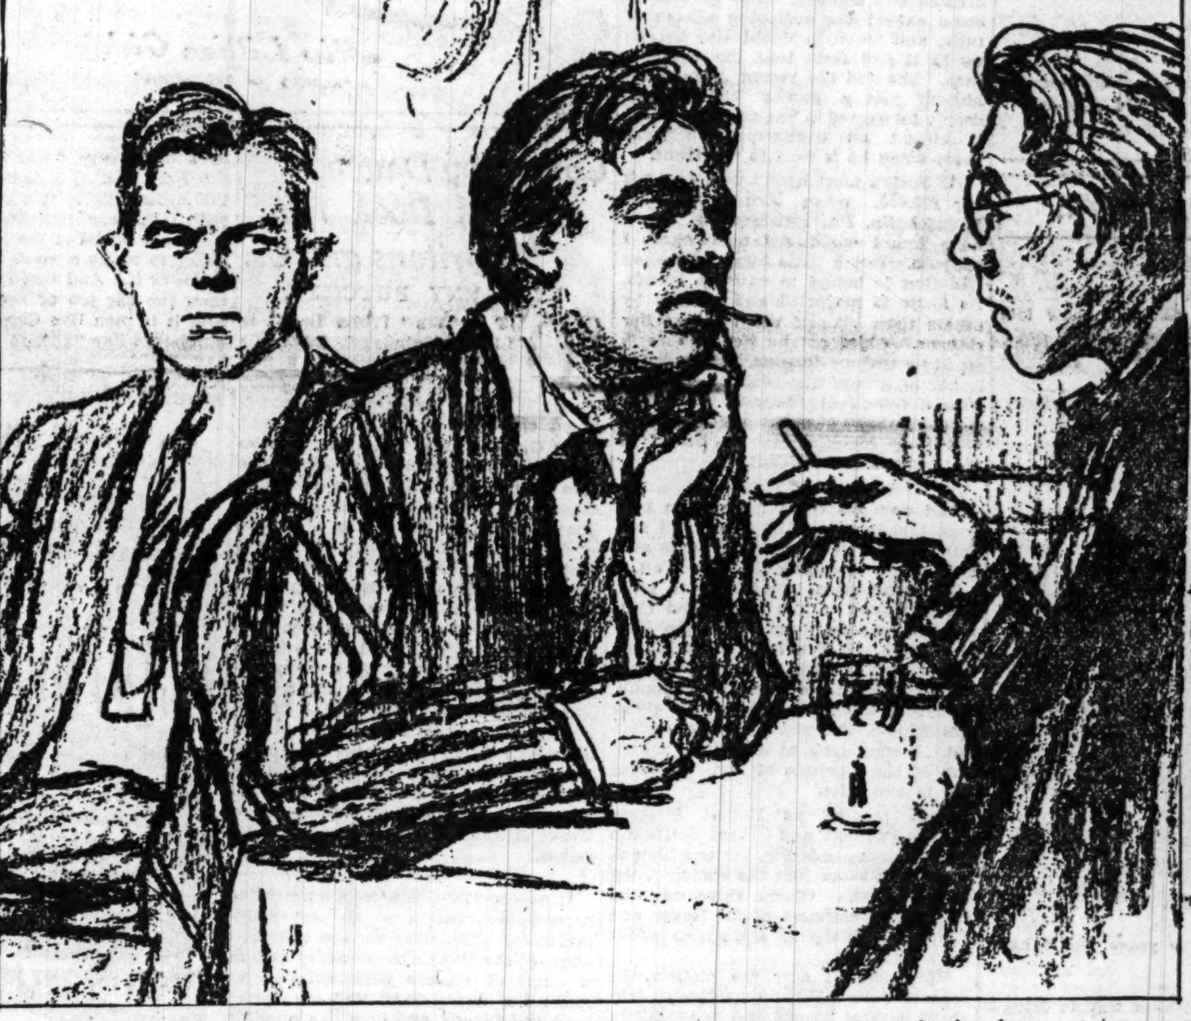
It may be that Bessie knows a French sailor, and then again it may be nothing more than a new style.



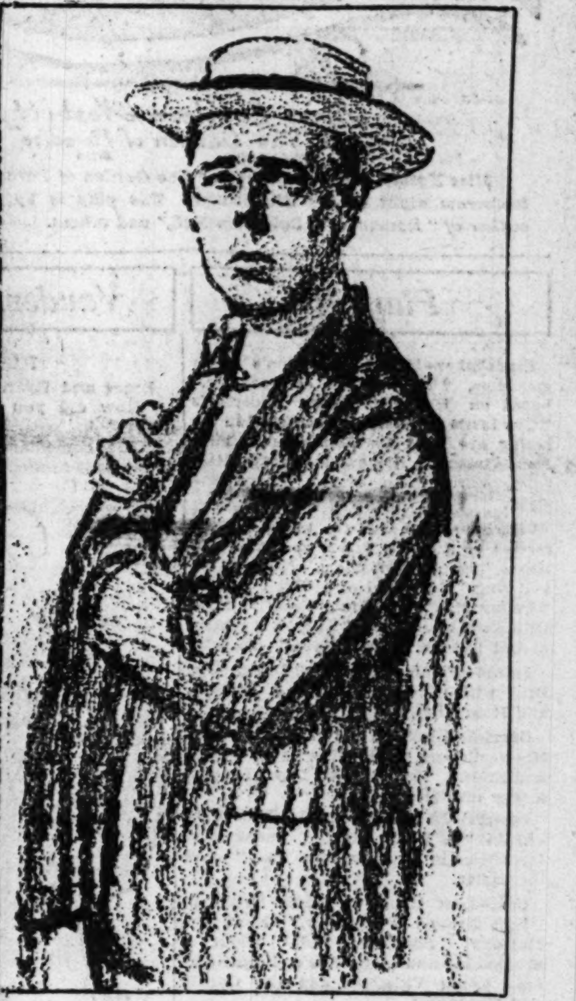
"I thought you might draw a fat German, sticking well out in front, with one of our boys about to bayonet him, and call it pushing back the enemy's front. Oh, you artists can do so much good in the war!" Wicks, the popular joke artist, being given a perfectly splendid idea for a war cartoon.



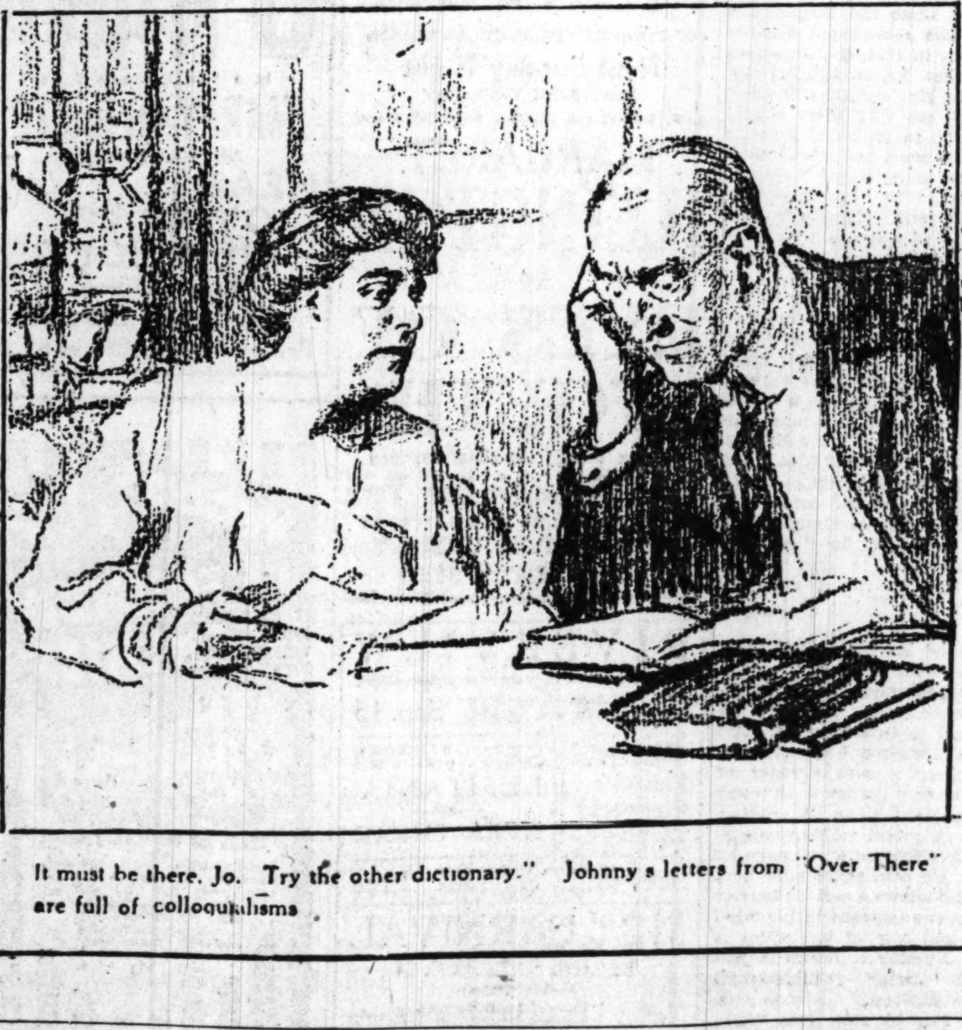
"Say, where do you get that stuff 'that's what I want to know?'" Millie, the switchboard girl at the apartment house, has just been called up by the rumor fiend, who wants to know if it is true that the Kaiser and the Crown Prince were hit on the head by German aeroplanes which tried to land in front of the palace at Potsdam.



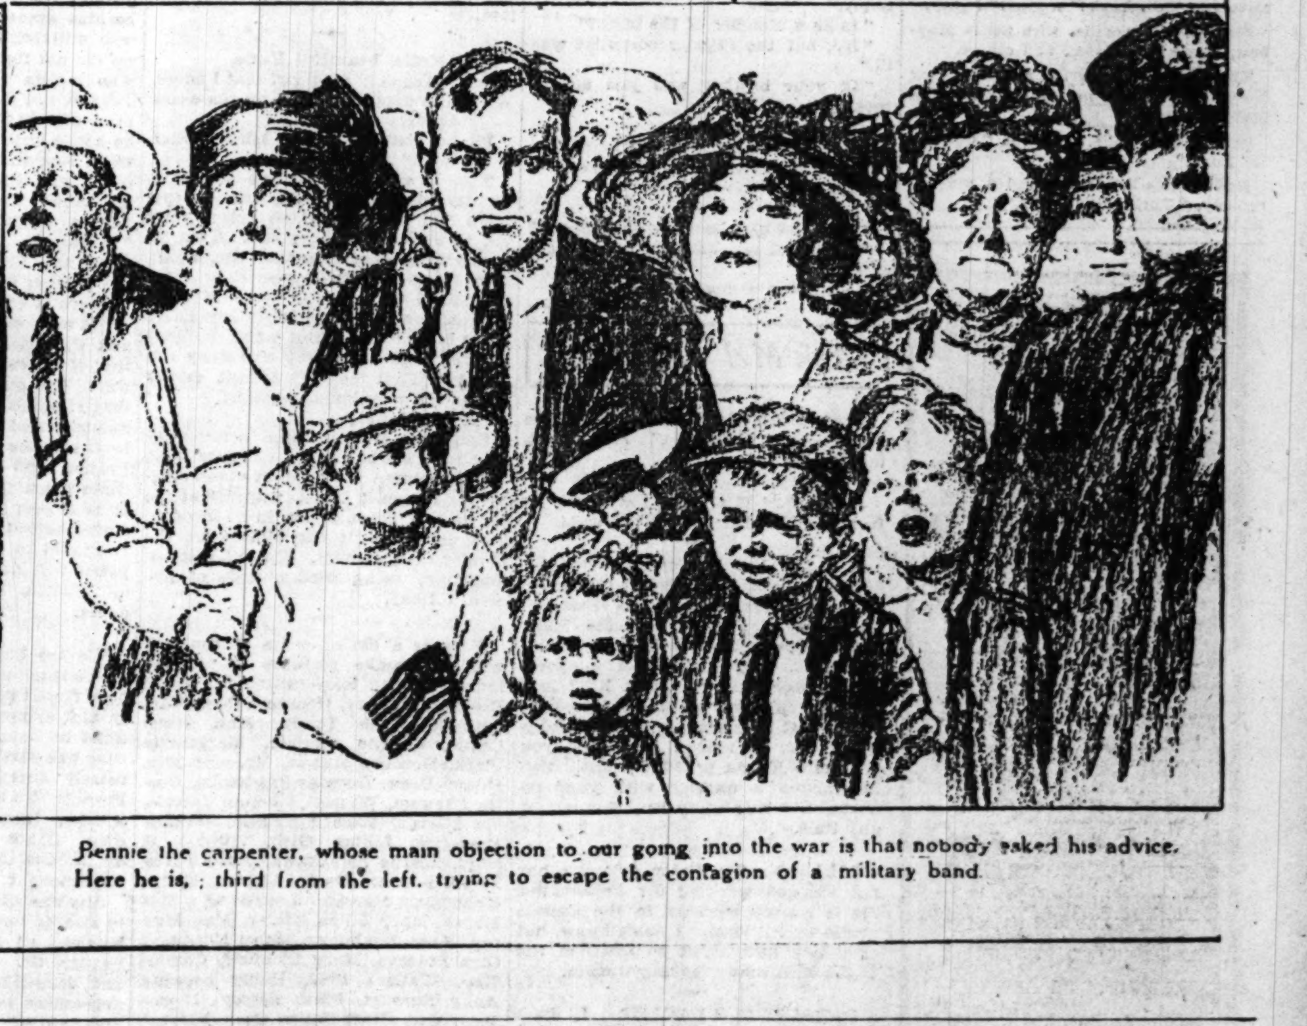
Eddie listening to a couple of super-pacifists in a downtown table d'hote who are convincing each other that non-resistance is the most beautiful thing on earth, decides visiting the draft board and waiving the deferred classification.



The self-conscious Mr. Cobbe, who has been rejected by his draft board, begins to fumble around in his coat for a classification card whenever a policeman comes in sight.



"It must be there, Jo. Try the other dictionary." Johnny's letters from "Over There" are full of colloquialisms.



Bennie the carpenter, whose main objection to our going into the war is that nobody asked his advice. Here he is, third from the left, trying to escape the contagion of a military band.

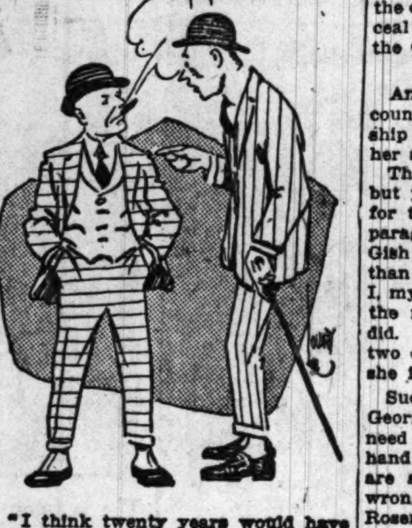
RIALTO.

Innes and Ryan:

"How did you like the show last night?"

"The comedians seemed nervous. What they needed was life."



"I think twenty years would have been enough."

"What is the easiest way to drive a nail without smashing your fingers?"

"Hold the hammer in both hands."

"I saw your brother in the parade today."

"Is he a member of the band?"

"No; but the regular cornetist was ill."

"O, your brother was just substitooting."

"I ran into a burglar last night."

"How did he get away from you?"

"He went 'through' me."

"I used to be a doctor with a circus."

"Then tell me, how did you treat a sick lion?"

"With the utmost respect."

Ask Me! Ask Me!

WENDALL H.: Yes, I know where "that Henry Kolker is." He's directing for Metro.

JACK S.: Well, sir, I'm going to frame it, and hang it on the wall!

G. E. M.: Yes, he's married—to Ann Little. Address him care of the American Film company, Santa Barbara, Cal. He is playing opposite Mary Miles Minter. He was born in Brooklyn, 1890. Robert Gordon supports Mary Pickford in "Captain Kidd Jr.," her new picture. Address him care of Artcraft Pictures corporation, Hollywood, Cal. I reckon he'd send you a picture if you asked for one. Better inclose a quarter with your request. I'll be glad to help you out at any time.

LILLIAN: No, Fatty Arbuckle has not stopped working for Paramount. He is merely working in the Diando studio in Glendale. I don't know, but they say he's about to astonish the world with a new leading woman.

PATRIOTIC PEARLIE: I don't blame the soldiers, Pearlie! Of course, you only mean to be patriotic when you salute them on the street, but as the army regulations have nothing in them regarding ladies saluting, the poor things probably think you're flirting. Wear a flag, knit a sock, or buy a thrift stamp, but,

Don't, when wandering down the street,
Salute each uniform you meet.

"Over There" with the Nobility and an All Star Cast

Presented at the Orchestra hall.
THE CAST.

Jessie Lovewell	Gloria Hope
Susie Broadplains	Lillian Gish
John Broadplains	Maxfield Stanley
The Rev. Josephus Broadplains	George Fawcett
Mlle. Corintee	Rosemary Theby

By Mae Tinée.

"THE GREAT LOVE" is more absorbing than the average super-feature for three reasons. Because of its intimate and authentic relation to the great war. Because of the titled English folk who make their debut into motion pictures during its seven reels. Because D. W. Griffith produced it. It abounds in the "touches" which have made this producer famous and is a thing of beauty as to its setting and scenery. The truth of the matter is, however, that Mr. Griffith has made many better pictures.

The cast of "The Great Love" is practically the same as that enacting "Hearts of the World." It has the addition of Henry Walthall, who more heavily lined and world weary than when he left the Griffith fold, is back again doing excellent work, although cast as the leading villain in the piece. The English society folk appearing, whose names Mr. Griffith rolls like sweet morsels under his tongue, include Queen Alexandra, the Princess of Monaca, the Countess of Masserene, Lady John Lavery, the Countess of Droghda, Lady Diana Manners, Miss Elizabeth Asquith, the Hon. Mrs. Montagu, Miss Bettina Stuart-Wortley, and Miss Violet Keppel. The ladies are shown at a charity bazaar, in hospital and munition work.

And now for the story:

Jim Young of Youngstown, Pa., white-hot over the German atrocities in Belgium, enlists in the British army. In the army camp on the outskirts of London he receives his training. He is sauntering through a suburb while on leave of absence when he meets a young person called Susie Broadplains, daughter of a curate. Susie is a silly little thing whose aspiration to become a great coquette is much hampered by the difficulties she has in managing her hands and feet. Though badly dressed and combed, Susie realizes to some extent the softening effects of tulle, and when in doubt ties herself up in it and feels that the world is hers. She and the young American—himself just a gawky boy—become deeply interested in one another. There is almost an engagement between them when he is sent to the front.

If Susie's aunt hadn't died and left her £20,000, when Jim Young of Youngstown, Pr., returned he would have found conditions unchanged, I suppose. But a little lump of money like that is bound to cause a splash. So Susie is marceled and courted by others than himself when the soldier returns. Chief among her suitors is an unscrupulous fortune hunter, a Sir Roger Brighton, who is much involved with a bunch of radicals, who wear the camouflage of pacifism only to conceal their machinations in behalf of the German government.

And now we come upon plots and counterplots, scenes of battle and airship raids, with the story of Susie and her suitors threading through it all.

The production is weak as to plot, but you don't in the least mind this, for the reasons I quoted in the first paragraph. If you have liked Lillian Gish before you will care for her more than ever as little Susie Broadplains. I, myself, whom she has always given the fidgets, thought her work splendid. I want you to especially notice two of the closeups of her. In them she is exquisite.

Such players as Robert Harron, George Fawcett, and George Seigmann need no commendation, but one likes to hand it to them just the same. They are splendid. Gloria Hope as the wronged sweetheart of Sir Roger and Rosemary Theby as a German agent were excellent.

Now when I saw the picture the censors were making considerable fuss about several scenes and one subtitle. Uncalled for fuss! There was nothing in the production the morning I saw it from start to finish that the average clean minded citizen should object to.

"K-k-k-Katie, beautiful Katie,
You're the only g-g-g-girl that I adore.
When the m-moon shines on the c-cow sheds,
I'll be waiting in the k-k-k-kitchen door."

This is what the leaders of "community singing" in the various theaters find their audiences prefer singing to almost anything else. That is, to anything other than the "Star Spangled Banner." The latter they voice with deep earnestness—tears in their eyes and a thrill setting their heart cords to vibrating. But when the final strains have died away and they are asked "What next?" almost surely comes the unanimous answer:

"K-k-k-Katie!"

Speaking of this same community singing, it's a big idea, for it gets folks in good humor. After you've been singing for fifteen or twenty minutes at the top of your voice, you're in no mood to kick either about the picture or the theater management. There's a lot of diplomacy being used outside of politics, I'll say.

Here is a list of some of the folk who will make pictures to aid the fourth Liberty loan—watch for them: Ethel Barrymore, George Beban, Enid Bennett, Alice Brady, Mrs. Irene Castle, Charlie Chaplin, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Lillian Gish, William S. Hart, Sessue Hayakawa, Alice Joyce, Frank Keenan, Enrico Caruso, Madge Kennedy, Harold Lockwood, Mae Marsh, Mary Miles Minter, Mae Murray, Mme. Nazimova, Mabel Normand, Olga Petrova, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Wallace Reid, Emily Stevens, Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Pearl White, Clara Kimball Young, Billie Burke, George M. Cohan, David Warfield, Fred Stone, William Duncan, and Earle Williams.

Friends and relatives desirous of seeing World employés work may observe them all they wish at home—but not in the studio. This ban on witnesses was issued only recently.

Coningsby Dawson Writes Book for Britons and Us.

BY FANNY BUTCHER.

"OUT to Win" [John Lane] is Lieut. Coningsby Dawson's latest contribution to a five foot shelf of war books, though it might conceivably be crowded off the edge by "Carry On" and "The Glory of the Trenches"—books of a high glowing idealism which has been rarely equaled. "The story of America in France" it is subcaptioned. That phrase tells more than a column of description of the contents of the book could tell. Lieut. Dawson, an Englishman who has lived in the United States and loves it and us, is peculiarly fitted to tell that story.

It is a straightforward and intensely interesting record of our accomplishments and plans in France and a sympathetic statement of what the United States did unofficially during those three and a half years when we were officially making up our minds. It is one of the most potent "getting together" arguments. It explains us to Great Britain and clarifying to ourselves.

It was written, one feels sure, after careful observation of an especially privileged kind, after serious consideration of the things he observed and in a spirit of sincere determination to make his native land and his foster land understand and love one another as their fighting men are understanding and loving one another. We don't always now, he says, and inscribes "a preface for fools only" in which he berates among them the Englishmen who still harbors resentment because we did not fight in 1914, the American who insists that he is fighting for France, not for England; the Englishman who can't see why there should be books written in praise of America when England's work has gone unheralded, and the man, either Britisher or American, who pessimistically "faces facts" and disregards the "magic quality of courage which uplifted the French at the Marne and the British at Mons."

There is only one vital thing in the world now, and that is to win this war, and the vital result of that must be that there can never be another great war. The only way to make sure of that result is for there to be a fundamentally and unattackably strong spiritual alliance between "Great Britain, France, and the United States, the three great promise keeping nations." It is a proposition which has been stated before. It will be stated again. It should be reiterated, for these four years will have been in vain if such an alliance fails to rise from their ashes.

We are bound eternally to France. There is no question of that. We have been from the beginning, both politically and sympathetically. But now we must be bound to Great Britain. The time has passed when any one could be merely anti-German and a lover of France. To be anti-British is as much a crime these days as to be pro-German. If not in actual words Coningsby Dawson says that on every page by inference. I, for one, agree with him.

Any one who allows a serious barrier to rise up for one moment in his mind between us and any of our allies is unpatriotic. Healthy criticism is just and desirable. Airing reminiscential grievances is unworthy the men who are fighting side by side now. "Men who have endured the same hell in a common cause," says Lieut. Dawson, "will be nearer in spirit when the war is ended than they are to their own civilian populations."

To have those civilian populations that near in spirit, Lieut. Dawson has tried in "Out to Win" to make them understand one another. "With the British," he says, "war is a sport. With the French it is a martyrdom. With the Americans it is a job." We have pulled on our military overalls and we're not afraid of the job. And we're going to make a good one of it while we're at it. And when it's over—well, then the big job of keeping together. And it is men like Coningsby Dawson and books like "Out to Win" that will have fashioned some of the implements for that bit of work.

A NEW CIO-CIO-SAN

Claudia Muzio
as Butterfly

Miss Muzio last night added the title rôle of "Madama Butterfly" to the list of her Puccini impersonations in Ravinia Park: she had previously been heard there in "Tosca" and "La Bohême." She will be Tosca again on Tuesday night and Aïda again on Thursday, and on Saturday night she will be heard in two more rôles—the smoking wife in Wolf-Ferrari's "The Secret of Suzanne" and the violent Maliela in the same composer's "The Jewels of the Madonna."

MATTERS OF MUSIC

To a suggestion that he put Wagner back in the Metropolitan's répertoire, using English text, Gatti-Casazza replied that such a ven- e was out of the question because d casts were not available. Henry Finck, the writer about music for New York Evening Post, thinks t pretty good casts might be made "with such singers as Geraldine arrar (whose greatest rôle is Eliza- eth in 'Tannhäuser'). Olive Frem- ad, Frieda Hempel, Margarete Matze- auer, Louise Homer, Riccardo Martin, arence Whitehill, Florence Easton, humann-Heink."

Those who urge that Wagner in Eng- h would be all right as wartime opera e able to bulwark their argument th the popularity in London of Sir omas Beecham's performances of Tristan," "Tannhäuser," and "The alkyrie." Campanini, season before t, gave eight of Wagner's operas thout German singers save Matze- uer, a "guest" in three. When at at time I wrote that only one mem- r of the resident company, William ck, was a German, that singer sent expostulatory note to say that he s a Hungarian.

That Wagner casts could with little fficulty be made up of singers whose tive tongue is English matters lit- in the labor involved in a venture the kind. The singers "up" in rôles know them in German. When, 1913-14, Campanini undertook to give me of the Saturday-night "pops" in glish, the burden of preparation fell hard on the American and English gers as on the continentals. Mr. hitehill, for an instance, found his task of the season in studying amillo in his own language.

nd the question of Wagner in any e is not likely to be among Cam- ni's problems of the season: he de- d not to give Wagner for the sound ntile reason that it did not pay.

the side of a Catskill, some days I encountered Galli-Curci, whose t request for knowledge was:

How is Claudia Muzio doing out in inia Park?"

explained that the young woman doing well: that she seemed happy the employment, and that the audi- es thought her great.

"Bene! Bene!" said the coloratura. m so glad! Muzio is a brilliant artist, with a voice, with imagination, with brains."

Other musicians were met with on other Catskills, one day or another; and all of them were equally solicitous about Miss Muzio, and equally fervent when told that all was fine with her on the north shore.

Galli-Curci, if the present schedule obtain, will take part in but six of Mr. Campanini's ten weeks in Chicago. She is to leave when Mary Garden comes, at the end of the year. If "Don Giovanni" be put on, Galli-Curci will, she says, take part: otherwise, her new rôles for the season will be in "Linda di Chamounix" and "Crispino e la Comare." She is to have no Chicago booking in concert or recital until after Campanini's season ends in Boston, late in the winter.

Caruso, in a recital the other night, sang George Cohan's "Over There" in English. Carolina White, who for a time stood well with the Chicago Opera, is sharing his programs, and is his vis-à-vis in the movies.

Caruso's silver jubilee in the theater impends: he made his debut in 1894 in Naples. He has been in the Metropolitan since the autumn of 1903; and he is, I suspect, more popular than ever.

Robert Couzinau, a baritone of the Paris Opera, comes over this year to the Metropolitan, where the French répertoire is growing.

Florence Macbeth is to return to the Chicago Opera, for such coloratura work as doesn't interest Galli-Curci. Miss Macbeth is a better singer than the most pretentious of Galli-Curci's self-styled rivals: her shortcomings when she sang in the Auditorium were of temperament, and not at all of either voice or method.

Edith Mason, once a Chicagoan and last season the principal soprano of Ravinia Park, is to head the touring organization called the La Scala. She had two years in the Metropolitan after failing to interest Campanini.

Reginald De Koven, who is come to the place where he thinks well of being called the dean of American composers, has, following John Sousa's example, composed a wedding-march.

Ravinia's Seventh Week

REPETITION of "Lucia," "Tos- ca," "La Traviata," and "Aïda" and the first performance in the season of "The Secret of Su- nne" and "The Jewels of the Ma- nna" make up the opera-list for the venth week in Ravinia Park. "Lu- a" will have a first-time-here singer the title-rôle in Lucy Gates, who ll be heard again as Violetta. Claudia uzio will repeat her admired imper- ations as Tosca and Aïda, and be rd for the first time in the Wolf- rrari pieces, which are arranged as e bill: all of "The Secret" and the cond act—the scene in the moonlit rden—of "The Jewels."

The arrangement for the week is:

Tonight—"Lucia," with Miss Gates, ss Latham, the Messrs. Harrold, Pic- Rothier, and Mr. Papi.

Tuesday night—"Tosca," with Miss zio, Miss Latham, the Messrs. Kings- Rothier, Daddi, and Mr. Papi.

dnesday night—"La Traviata," Miss Gates, Miss Latham, the rs. Harrold, Picco, D'Amegelo, and Papi.

ursday night—"Aïda," with Miss o, Miss Braslau, the Messrs. ston, Rothier, Picco, D'Amgelo, an, and Mr. Papi.

turday night—"The Secret of Su- a," first time, with Miss Muzio and the Messrs. Picco and Daddi, and Act II of "The Jewels of the Madonna," with Miss Muzio, Miss Latham and the Messrs. Kingston and Marr, Mr. Papi conducting both pieces.

The customary Sunday concert will not be given this afternoon: a game of baseball between the respective first-teams of Camp Grant and Great Lakes will be ployed at 3 o'clock, with some extra athletics to follow, and music by a detachment of Great Lakes musicians.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Hageman, will give concerts tomorrow and Friday nights and Thursday and Friday afternoons. The Saturday concert, like today's, will be displaced with sports by the boys from Fort Sheridan and Great Lakes.

H. Felber Jr., formerly of the Chicago Symphony and now of the orchestra at Great Lakes, will be tomorrow night's soloist. Ruth Miller, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera brought on for some parts in the Ravinia répertoire, will be Friday night's. Mrs. Van Vlissingen's little dancers will take part in Thursday afternoon's program, designed as of special appeal to children; and Berbice Seabury, soprano, and Ernst Bacon, pianist, will contribute to Friday afternoon's.

OPERA FOR DETROIT?

onard Liebling in the Musical Courier.]

N the Detroit Saturday Night of May 17 there is a mysterious allusion to a plan" which has been completed for the establishment in Detroit of more distinguished musical venture n any as yet known here. It is dis- tly original, eminently American, is purely a question of purchase regular business principles of ex- nge, financially, and of the ne-plus- of ability, artistically. It will be to operation at the earliest mo- onsistent with patriotism. . . . the happy hour strikes, the new s ready."

snooped about a bit, and found n divided in the guessing as to haracter of the new plan. Most ns thought it refers to an op- venture, municipal or otherwise.

Why should there not be a Detroit a as well as a Metropolitan Opera a Chicago Opera?" declared one -visioned music-lover. "This city is to have a symphony orchestra e first class. The first-class sym- y orchestras of Paris, Berlin, Dres- Petrograd, Moscow, Vienna, and kholm are the opera orchestras of e cities. We have the orchestra, have the conductor, we have the rican singers, we have the ambi- we have the money. Why not a oit Opera?"

THE MONEY-RETURN

[From the Musician.]

"WHAT is the use of studying music?" said a young man recently. "It will never bring me in a dollar."

This young man may be correct in his statement. The fact that he feels so certain that he would never get out of music anything in the way of money is suggestive of the probability that his statement is correct.

But there are other returns than money. For example, a boy who enters college-life able to play the piano, the violin, or the 'cello, or with equal skill the clarinet, oboe, bassoon, or cornet, is almost certain to find a place made for him in the college social life—in the case of big universities, membership in an orchestra or a band is open to him—that is a big help to a young fellow. And, when he goes out into active life, that same piano, violin, 'cello, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, cornet is a big asset to making worth-while friends among musical amateurs or as an aid to money-earning while getting a start in a profession or business.

The young man who seems contemptuous of music because he can make no money from it gets very little spiritual satisfaction out of life. But observe closely the young man with a love for music, to which he devotes every spare hour and dollar: in him you will find a happy and contented soul, broad in his sympathies, kindly in his acts, and generous in his thoughts.

AN ARMY SUNDAY IN FRANCE

[From the Stars and Stripes.]

IF you're in luck enough to be what our French friends call en repos after doing a trick up front; if you're out of luck enough to be quartered in one of those feverishly energetic "rest" camps of which our British cousins are so fond; if you're just plain occupied in an American training area back of the lines; or, if you've just landed and are just sort of feeling your way around the country—what do you do on Sunday?

Hasty addition and correction: What do you do on a summer Sunday in France provided you're not on K. P., on guard, on fatigue detail, moving boxes, or cleaning things up for an inspection? For, as you well know, somebody has to do all those things on Sunday as well as every other day; and, just as often as not, it's apt to be your turn to do them.

But supposing the C. O. has rushed you so hard during the week that there is a whole day off, or even a whole half day off, looming up for Sunday; supposing the list of details on the bulletin board does not, by some miraculous chance, contain your name; supposing that you are able to duck your duty sergeant when he comes rustling around for "three vol'nteers to help move them crates"—when you get your day off, or your half day off, what do you do with it?

Of course, a good deal depends on where you are when Sunday comes around, and on what attractions the countryside or cityside has to offer against the parson's or the Y. M. man's staples. But in general, after all the possibilities have been exhausted in planning, you know mighty well what you do, in the end: You either walk, sleep, or write. Sometimes you can work in all three.

Yes, and the greatest of these is walk; for you can't get to a place to fish, you can't get to a place to bathe, you usually can't get to a place to play ball (well, what of it?) without walking to it. Just as if you never did anything else in the army—just as though the experience were an entirely new one—you walk.

Out into the fields, there to lie down and collect a shirtful of grasshoppers and pore over a two months' old comic supplement from the States and snooze blissfully in consequence; out into the woods where, under cover, you can take off your blouse and go along with it over your arm without having an M. P. call you for it; down by the riverside to dangle your feet in the historic stream after the manner by G. H. Q. made and provided—or, if the historic stream is deep enough (as it usually isn't) to jump in all over—you walk. And then you have to walk back, and are usually ready and willing to get back, by evening chow time.

Some of the historic streams have fish in them. Some of our O. D.-d friends—perhaps you're one of them—haven't gotten over the juvenile fishing habit; so, after a week of digging trenches and other things, they start Sunday right by delving for worms, pestering the supply sergeant for twine, making m'sieur, who runs the general store in the stone house on the corner, understand that it's a few old corks they want, and they're off.

Get anything? Sometimes, but rarely and poorly—for how can you entice fish when you can't speak their language? Still, a stray catch or two will give you credit for good intentions with the cook, for by producing a fish or two for the officers' mess he can lord it over them all the rest of the week and force them to get around on time to meals.

Fishing isn't a bad Sunday sport, as Sunday sports go; and, the nearer the sea you are, the better it is.

If you have a ukulele, and the guy next you has a banjo, and the guy on the other side can borrow the new lieutenant's mandolin by virtue of being the new lieutenant's orderly, there is every reason to believe that you have the Sunday-off problem solved—except for the old-fashioned soldiers who believe in sleeping while they have a chance, and are unduly fussy about being musically disturbed.

If you haven't any of these things, the chances are that somebody will have a mouth organ, and you're off; that is, unless you're lucky enough to be within range of one of your own bands or a French one. Music always creeps into an A. E. F. Sunday, somehow, sooner or later, much to the delight of the admiring inhabitants of the billet town, and to the relieving of the American chest.

Naturally, if the company's baseball outfit has arrived, and there are 18 men who are not on guard or kitchen or anything, there is only one thing to do with Sunday afternoon. (Dr. Kneeland, of the Lord's Day League, is not in France). Even if there are not 18 men free, even if there is no real bat, just nothing but a wagon tongue filched right from under the stable sergeant's nose; even if there is nothing but an old, busted and rain-soaked indoor baseball, there is only one thing to do with Sunday afternoon, namely, One Old Cat, with steel Stetsons for bases, and no gloves. On occasion, the outfield may be dispensed with, and two teams of six made up. On any occasion, the umpire can be eliminated.

If it rains, as it is just as like as not to do, the weather man of Europe being a pro-German and generally a skunk, there are the indoor pastimes of Sunday: Shirt-picking, reading, shaving, sock-changing, and oiling up the old gun. Lots of things get done on rainy Sundays in the A. E. F. that never would get done at all, otherwise; so perhaps that remark about the weather man is a bit unfair.

But rain or no rain, the great and goodly sport of writing home flourishes apace in every camp, in every rest billet, in every place where the A. E. F. lays down its pack. Censoring officers are said to dread Sunday nights almost as much as if they had to go to prayer meeting.

There is always some kind of a church carrying on in the morning, whether under French or American auspices; that much is sure about an army Sunday in France. There are always three squares a day, with a little extra tacked on at noon or night, to be obtained by the simple expedient of holding up a vacant mess-kit and an equally vacant face. There are always places to walk to, for one purpose or another, and always other people—either local or army talent—with whom one may walk. And there most always is—and if there isn't, it's a darn shame and should be remedied at once—a place where you can write without having a baseball clipping off your ears and the wherewithal for the writing process.

Oh, a Sunday in France, under army auspices, isn't a bad Sunday; that is, as Sundays go and—oh, well, say it!—as armies go. It's not so very different, save for the chicken and ice cream at dinner and the Sunday paper all day, from some Sundays we have known back home.

Comment by Mme. X.

Women Invade Stag Precincts of Old Elm Links.

By Mme. X.

WHEW, how old Sol opened his drafts and burned up his coal last week! No conservation, no Dr. Garfield for him. In the east they are saying that Dr. Garfield can fuel all the people some of the time and some of the people all the time, but he can't fuel all the people all the time. The extra sultry atmosphere on the Old Elm golf course last Sunday afternoon did not jolt the enthusiasm of the visitors, who in a many colored throng, many hundred strong, faithfully followed the famous players—Evans, Hutchinson, McDonald, and Edwards—around the eighteen hole course. There is no lovelier course in the west from the point of view of the nongolfer who seeks for scenery. The praise of the infatuated golfer also rests on the Old Elm course, whose varied features and perfect condition threaten the supremacy of that patriarch and pattern course, the Chicago Golf club at Wheaton.

The clubhouse at Old Elm—hitherto terra incognita to all women and many men—attracted much comment. The pretty entrance court, with its patio effect, its hanging vines, its gay, growing flowers mirrored in little pools, and its cages of birds, suggests anything but a club in whose utter exclusion of women misogynistic members take solid comfort. It looks more like the setting for the east end ladies' friendly sunshine makers' society.

Both within doors and on the pleasant terrace to the south and west of the club house groups of women sat last Sunday, some knitting, and all chatting, as much at home as though they sat there every day. I thought I saw in distant thickets those members who had voted against this festival. They were hiding from the enemy or spying on them with long distance glasses, and had sentinels out to apprise them of the final departure of the last petticoat so that they might emerge and breathe once more the pure air of freedom.

Perhaps if those recalcitrant members had produced from their pockets the two or three thousand dollars raised by the entertainment for the Red Cross the club territories need not have been profaned that afternoon.

Among those noted as being there were the Cyrus H. McCormicks, Edward Ryersons, Clyde Carrs, Frederick Uphams, General and Mrs. Barry, William Prescott Hunts, Hale Holdens, Joseph T. Ryersons, Jesse Mosses, Mrs. Scott Durand and Miss Marie Rozet.

One Lucky Man.

The Illinois Motor corps jitneyed visitors to the match, back and forth from the club to the Fort Sheridan station, half a mile to the east, and added a chic air to the scenery by their natty uniforms. Were they not all so very young and so very good looking their caps would be distinctly unbecoming. But there's a rakish, devil-may-care air in the way they wear those trying caps that makes that headgear almost captivating.

There's one officer at Fort Sheridan who wouldn't change jobs with Gen. Pershing, and that's Lieut. Barrett, the nice looking young man who puts the Illinois Motor corps young women through a two hours' drill every Saturday morning on an unoccupied field at Fort Sheridan. It's the prettiest thing in the world to watch those gay, smart young girls go through the setting up exercises, trot at double quick around the meadow, do various degrees of goose step (made no easier by their scant skirts) and, as a final stunt, charge and back and otherwise maneuver their various cars at given signals.

They do it all with great precision and seem to enjoy it. Among the members of the corps, whose chief is Mrs. Mark Walton, are the Misses Elinor Holden, Harriet McLaughlin, Elizabeth Hoyt and Elizabeth Thorne.

Glimpses of the Future.

The idea is to make and keep the girls in the prime of physical fitness for their work. The same motive underlies the daily drill of hundreds of young women now working for the government in offices in Washington, which is a most interesting and picturesque feature of the national capital. Perhaps at some future date it will be a part of everybody's routine in city life. People will turn out in every precinct in a regularly established drill ground as a matter of course. It would do much to promote the health of the community. Also the neighborliness. If, as you lie flat, face down on the earth, and raise yourself by placing your hands on the ground, keeping your body rigid, and you rub elbows with Mrs. Slambowski, you're bound to develop a sense of friendliness for this lady perhaps not otherwise attainable.

In fact, one of the great products of this war, which has caused us to set our national house in order, is going to be the development of this community sense. The old individualism is being thrown into the discard, having been judged by its fruits, and found wanting.

Wanted, Influenza Serum.

We would better cultivate all the health we can, for we're going to need it when what the Germans call the Spanish influenza, which has been sweeping Europe, gets across the sea and begins its progress through this continent. Come it surely will. The Germans call it Spanish; the Spanish call it German, claiming that it comes from Germany, whose soldiers have brought it home from the battlefields. France and England are also suffering from the epidemic.

Its implied origin recalls the first invasion of la grippe, as it was called in 1891, or the Russian influenza. In 1887 there was a great and devastating flood along the course of one of China's principal rivers. When it subsided thousands and thousands of corpses were left rotting in that almost depopulated district. As few remained alive to bury them, these defunct celestials disintegrated and scattered their microbic remains to the breeze.

There fell upon the land a strange new malady, a regular plague of fever, aching bones and a subsequent heart weakness frequently fatal. It spread by the caravan routes across Asia to Russia, and thence by the great Russian rivers to central and western Europe. It took four years to reach this country, but it did. Those thousands of drowned Chinese revenged themselves on an innocent world.

This malady now ravaging Europe seems to have every symptom of the Russian influenza—which should have been called the Chinese revenge. If some scientist should discover a serum that would counteract it, it would be of great value at the present moment. Did you know that the serum to protect one from cholera has been found, and that this once dread disease has been rendered negligible in the east where the British armies are fighting? So why not an anti influenza serum?

Not a "Tea Corps."

They're a fine looking lot, the men now in training at Fort Sheridan. They are called the Students' Army Training corps, and they are anxious that you should know that the letters S. A. T. C. stand for those four words, and not for the Salvation Army Training corps, or the Saturday Afternoon Tea club.

The lads at this training camp are almost all from western colleges, to which they return in September, with certain good marks to be added to their college score. If they're needed next spring in our army, a few weeks' further training will fit them to take charge of putting our next year's draft army into shape. Meanwhile they're a pleasant and good looking addition to our north shore landscape, and any motorist who omits to offer one or two of them a lift, when they meet them trudging up and down our north shore roads, deserves exile to Germany.

A north shore woman, on her way to Highland Park, picked up an S. A. T. C. man and, on questioning him, found that he was walking to Chicago to see his young wife. She asked him why he didn't take the train. He said that out of the $30 a month he got, by the time he had paid his wife her share, $15, and paid his insurance, $6.75, there wasn't much left for carfare and other expenses. The motor lady offered him a ticket to town, but he blushed and said that wouldn't do at all; he couldn't accept charity even in such a friendly form. So southward he marched when she let him out of her car. It is to be hoped some other motorist gave him a further lift.

Did you know, by the way, that the minute a soldier is wounded or otherwise incapacitated, his pay stops? He is cared for gratis, but gets no wages from Uncle Sam. It doesn't seem quite fair, somehow. But, remembering this, if any one asks you for money to use in a fund to buy the many little cherished extras for a soldier boy in a hospital or convalescing behind the lines, give what you can spare. It will purchase happiness for some plucky boy who has had a mishap at the firing line.

Look at Danville.

Art isn't standing still these martial days, though war clouds make it rather dark for painter folk.

There's that young and gifted Norwegian, Abrahamson, who has his studio at 19 East Pearson street. He has just finished a striking portrait of Mrs. Prescott Hunt—a really stunning piece of work, and a capital likeness into the bargain. It's a life size full length study. Mrs. Hunt is wearing a simple yellow, décollete gown, to which a rose pink brooch of antique design gives a note of contrasting color, that is very effective. Mrs. Hunt gave a "portrait tea" in the artist's studio last Wednesday afternoon at which she gathered the few "society folk" still left in town.

There's a downstate city which has earned a high place on our state roster—perhaps the highest—because of its war record. It is Danville. There was no draft in Danville because her fighting manhood volunteered in such numbers that her quota was filled before the draft law was put in operation. True to form, Danville oversubscribed the three Liberty loans, the Red Cross drive, and the Y. M. C. A. drive. In the now famous One Hundred and Forty-ninth field artillery, "Reilly's Bucks," a whole company comes from Danville, whence also hails one of its best officers, Maj. Redden.

Maj. Redden's sister, Miss Mabel Redden, and Mrs. Lin Griffith, whose son is a lieutenant in the regiment, have organized the Danville women, whose husbands, sons, and brothers are in Battery A, into one of the most efficient units of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Field Artillery War relief. They turn out knitted goods in a never ceasing stream.

Campaign Needs Help.

Every day in Danville at noon all the church and factory bells call the people to ten minutes' prayer for the men at the front. They pray for the men of Danville, for the men of Illinois, and, lastly, for all American soldiers and sailors. If it were possible for 100,000,000 Americans to pause each day at noon for ten minutes' prayer for our fighting forces what a tremendous spiritual effect it would have on every man in uniform!

There is no more important work than that undertaken by the committee in charge of the national war savings campaign, a committee appointed by the secretary of the treasury, with Frank A. Vanderlip at the head of it. Here in Chicago the devoted and able women working on the local woman's committee are finding the task a heavy one because of lack of aid.

They complain—and not without reason—that while the war in France is using up lives, ammunition, supplies of all kinds, the women of Chicago are closing their homes and going into the cool and peaceful country, as if there was no behind the lines work for them to do. They urge patriotic women to coöperate with the little band of faithful workers who are keeping open office in the Conway building these steaming hot days. They are: Miss Agnes Foreman, Mrs. Joseph Medill Patterson, Mrs. Samuel T. Chase, Mrs. A. H. Lamm, Mrs. P. J. O'Keefe, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Mrs. Samuel Insull, Mrs. Frederick D. Countiss, Miss Marie Rozet, and Mrs. Frederick Tahl.

If you have spare time—time you have not already pledged to Red Cross or some other war relief work—go up there, or telephone Franklin 3670 and offer your services. This is no summer for dawdling about bargain counters in the morning, for afternoon naps, for other forms of loafing. The utmost use of every hour between getting up in the morning and going to bed at night leaves us still fearfully in debt to our fighting men.

Old Order Changeth.

Mrs. M. K. Armstrong, at the head of this committee of women, is of the best old Chicago stock. Her grandfather, the late Roswell B. Mason, was one of our well known pioneers, and as mayor of Chicago at the time of the Chicago fire in 1871 made a name for himself by his efficient handling of our stricken and disorganized city. Her father, the late Edward G. Mason, was one of the most brilliant and witty men of a set of brilliant wits who gave to Chicago real distinction in the 70s and 80s of the last century. They flourished before the age of materialism set in, which spread the name of Chicago to the ends of the earth stamped on food products and machinery. They have passed away, nor left any quite equal to them today. Even their names are perishing in the flames of the present that are consuming the past, so let us give them a little further immortality by listing them in this perishable column. Among them were—and prefix them all with that final title, "the late"—James Norton, Dr. Clinton Locke, Prof. David Swing, Maj. Joseph Kirkland, and Maj. Henry Huntington.

Another Drive Coming.

Apropos of the coming drive for funds for the Salvation army, which will be made from Aug. 12 to 19, is the naïve response of a chauffeur when asked if his son, who is over in France, was at the front:

"I reckon he is, because his last letter was written on Salvation army stationery, and that always means he's in the front line trenches."

Is any further reason necessary in soliciting funds for this grand body of soldiers' aids? They serve doughnuts and hot coffee to our men under fire. So when they shake the tambourine at you, dip—dip deep—in your pockets!

It was a group of about thirty men and women who gathered last Tuesday evening on the terrace at the Leverett Thompsons in Lake Forest and there, under the stars, with a gentle southwest breeze just rustling the leaves, listened, in the soft darkness, to Prof. Michaud of the Chicago university tell of his three years with the French army on the western front. He described the poilu in his various aspects—gay, grumbling, kindly, melancholy, bored, but all the time determined to drive the Boche from the soil. He told of the French officers and their fraternal relations with their men. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McBirney, Mrs. Henry Stimson Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cary, Mr. and Mrs. David Adler, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Aldis.

The warm, fragrant, starry summer night made the war seem peculiarly remote and incredible.

Mrs. William D. McJunkin is often called the youngest and most devoted grandmother in Chicago, and she is never happier than when she is surrounded by her three little granddaughters, the children of her only child, Mrs. Frank W. Harvey. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey and Kathleen, Helen, and Billy are living with Mr. and Mrs. McJunkin in their beautiful new residence at 1021 Granville avenue. Mrs. McJunkin, who spent the winter and spring in California, has been active in various war and home charities since her return and is staying in town this summer so that she may continue her work.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

Make Our Aliens Americans, Plan of Women's Body

BY CAROLINE HEDGER, M. D.

ALONG with the agitation and internal adjustment that is the lot of America at war, the American becomes for the first time forcibly aware of the alien, the foreign speaking citizen whom we have heretofore neglected, both from our own sense of superiority and self-complacency and because we are not monolingual. Now that we realize the alien's gifts and possibilities, the next step is to get the foreigner to participate in American life. To do this we must have a common language—and it must be English.

It is necessary to find teachers with an attitude that is friendly and dignified, but not patronizing, to teach them. The teacher must call the alien by his name and recognize him as a person. She must develop his English by the use of new and special materials and most of all she must be an American who can provide other healthy American contacts.

Though teachers are the greatest need, they cannot accomplish the object alone. Every American must help and the training in foreign contact and the bringing about of a normal point of view must be brought to every town and city so as to supply eventually the money and legislation for this work.

Under the direction of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense we are to take up in Chicago the training of teachers for aliens and workers for a larger Americanization in an institute to be held at the Woman's City club, 116 South Michigan avenue, beginning on Aug. 19 and lasting until Aug. 30. There will be lectures daily from 2 to 5 p. m. and field work in the mornings. The program of daily events is as follows:

Lectures—Afternoons, 2 to 5 p. m.

Monday, Aug. 19—Caroline Hedger, M. D., "The Problem of the Foreign Born"; Mrs. [illegible] Wood, "How Shall We Save Illinois' Quota of the Hundred Thousand Babies?"

The American army is to have a woman's auxiliary army corps. Miss Elsie Gunther, the only woman who has a captaincy in the American army, is going to recruit 5,000 women to do the jobs behind the lines which ordinarily are done by soldiers, such as clerical work, telephone and telegraph operating, driving, traffic directing, etc. Already "Capt. Gunther" has 250 "Waacs" at Tours, where the Y. W. C. A. is in charge of their welfare.

But you cannot get into the "Waacs" for the American army from this side of the water. At least, not yet. According to the Y. W. C. A. officials at the Chicago headquarters in the Stevens building, Miss Gunther is taking first the women that she can find already overseas. She will not begin her recruiting from this side for two or three months, it is stated, and until she does there is no way to get into the "Waacs."

There are, of course, other ways open for the right kind of girl. The Salvation army, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. conteens, the nursing and stenographical departments of the Red Cross overseas service, the social service work of the Y. M. C. A., the civilian relief work conducted by the kindergartners, and the American Fund for French Wounded, the women's overseas hospital work, and others.

All roads do not lead to France, however, and you have to prove to the heads of the various organizations that you can fill a definitely stated niche before you will be accepted. The way is hard and though many feel called to France, comparatively few are chosen. If you want to go to France the best way is to do such good work here that you will be picked out when your record is known.

Mrs. Charles E. Frankenthal, chairman of the organizing committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense for the Belgian Flower day, Aug. 26, has asked for volunteers to help sell forget-me-nots in the loop on that day for the benefit of the queen's fund for Belgian babies.

Mrs. John MacMahon, director of the bureau of branches and auxiliaries, Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross, announced yesterday that Miss Kathryn Linn had been appointed chairman of downtown auxiliaries as Mrs. Fletcher Dobyns' successor.

The Cook county fuel administration is perfecting plans which will be completed within the next two weeks, whereby the people of this country will receive the benefit of a positive price administration.

This work will be headed by Lewis E. Hart and under his direction the administration will appoint deputy administrators in the thirteen sections of the city and in every suburb throughout Cook county, who will in turn have price investigators under their jurisdiction.

It will be the exclusive duty of this department to see that prices on coal are properly and efficiently administered, and the general public provided for, which is the first consideration and object of the administration.

Any householder or firm will receive an audience at any time on behalf of the deputy administrator in whose section they are located, who will promptly investigate any irregularities or overcharges.

A thrift stamp (25 cents) will be the price of admission to the war savings tea which will be held in the red room of the La Salle tomorrow from 3 to 5 p. m. and which will inaugurate the new war savings drive during Pershing week—Aug. 15 to 22. Thousands of women active in the Liberty loan and war savings drives are expected to attend the tea, which is given under the auspices of the woman's organization.

The following women have been named as the executive committee of the woman's organization:

Mrs. Harry Inwood, Mrs. Samuel Chase, Mrs. Frederick Countiss, Mrs. Frederick Tahl, Mrs. Hopewell Rogers, Mrs. Augustus Peabody, Mrs. P. J. O'Keefe, Mrs. Claribel Schmidtt, Mrs. Samuel Insull, Mrs. Clark Bennett, Mrs. George Higgenson Jr., Mrs. Leo Austrian, Mrs. A. H. Lamm, Mrs. Joseph Medill Patterson, Mrs. Edward Brewer, and the Misses Marie Roset, Amy Marr, Josephine Palmer, and Gladys Marr.

Adequate housing for workers in industries producing munitions in the Chicago district is to be provided not only through the discovery of every available house and room and the extension of transportation facilities, but through permanent buildings where such are found necessary, C. Grant La Farge of the housing bureau of the department of labor told members of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

Coincident with his announcement it was made known that the survey into housing conditions in the district south of Thirty-first street and west of Halsted street is more than half completed. Every vacant building and room available for sleeping quarters is being listed.

It is planned to set up a home registration service to help workmen connect with the vacancies as soon as it is completed.

The Chicago branch of the Collegiate Periodical league sends magazines to the soldiers and sailors in camps and on ships near this city.

There are about 100,000 boys to be supplied and in order to do this every home in Chicago should immediately turn over its magazines after they have been read.

You can bring your magazines regularly to the public library, first floor, patents room, or leave them at one of the branch libraries, or if you have or can collect fifty current numbers among your friends telephone Central 5822 and a member of the Illinois motor corps will call for them on Mondays.

The food conservation station at 28 South Wabash avenue is becoming headquarters for a number of drives. This week there will be a special child welfare drive in connection with the work of the woman's committee child welfare department. All the lectures held during the week will have special reference to the care and diet of children. Among the speakers will be Dr. Henry Cheney, Dr. W. A. Evans of THE TRIBUNE, Dr. Caroline Hedger, Miss May Morse, R. N.; Dr. Charles Matter, and Mrs. Grace Lindsay, district supervisor Infant Welfare society. On Monday Mrs. Alfred Hope will give a practical demonstration of the proper diet for a child between the ages of 1 and 6 years.

Miss Alma Foerster, a Chicago Red Cross nurse, has just received a "brevet" order of the third class from the Roumanian government in appreciation of her services in that country during the last year.

The order was transmitted to her by former President Taft, who expressed his personal appreciation of the value of Miss Foerster's services.

Miss Foerster, who was formerly a head nurse at the Rush medical dispensary, is a sister of Mrs. John F. Dryer, who, with Mrs. Victor P. Arnold, has charge of the Norwood Surgical Dressings. This is Miss Foerster's second year of Red Cross work abroad, as she was stationed at Kiev, Russia, during the first year of the war.

There'll be thousands of Chicago's prettiest girls out next week wearing the poke bonnets of the Salvation army, whose record overseas in caring for our fighting men makes every lecture returned from the front sing paeans of praise in honor of the Salvation lassies and their brothers.

There will be at least twenty booths established in the loop presided over by women and young girls in Salvation army costume. Flowers will be sold on Tuesday, leading florists of the city having contributed largely to the fund. On Friday the girls will sell buttons, which will be receipts for doughnuts or pieces of pie served to soldiers in France.

Subscriptions will also be taken for the fund at the headquarters of the woman's committee, 120 West Adams street. Mrs. J. Ogden Armour is general chairman and Mrs. George M. Shirk vice chairman for the women's organization of the drive.

Other events scheduled to add interest to next week's activities are an athletic carnival at Comiskey park and a luncheon for 350 men from Fort Sheridan, which will be given in Grant park.

Enrollment cards for the army school of nursing, headquarters of which is in the offices of the surgeon general in Washington, have just been received at the Council of Defense building and have been distributed among the different ward recruiting stations. The requirements of the army school of nursing state that the applicant must be white, unmarried, and over 21. She must also be a high school graduate.

The mothers, wives, and relatives of the boys in the field hospital companies of the One Hundred and Eighth sanitary train will meet at Memorial hall, Chicago Public library, on Thursday.

AMERICAN SONGS

[From the Musical Courier.]

WHEN are our singers going to give the ballad its rightful place on programs for American and English audiences? Surely the singers are not so stupid that they fail to note the real applause that ballads in the English language receive when the foreign songs are finished and the final group gets a heated hearing! They act as if the real business of the recital was to show their versatility in old Italian, standard German, and modern French songs.

Having proved to their own satisfaction that they are artists of international culture, they feel safe in coming down from their exalted rostrum and mingling with the common people by singing ballads in a tongue the multitude understand, and of a style that appeals to the national temperament. Sometimes they feel hurt to find that the crowd applauds the native song vociferously and allows the Brahms or Wolf or Debussy or Scriabin or Ravel or Grieg or Strauss number to [illegible] without enthusiasm.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

Bible Conference to Hear Bryan and Rev. Holden

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

THE Winona Bible conference, interdenominational and international, will begin its annual session at Winona Lake, Ind., next Friday and will close Sunday evening, Aug. 25. This is the twenty-fourth session of the most largely attended Bible conference in the west if not, indeed, in the United States. William Jennings Bryan is president of the conference, and will attend for six days of the session. He will preside at a laymen's church conference, which will be a new feature at Winona this year. He will also preside over a dry workers' conference. The Rev. J. Stuart Holden, rector of St. Paul's church, London, England, will be one of the speakers from overseas. The Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, professor in Wycliffe college, Toronto, Canada, and the Rev. J. Gregory Mantle of London will also address the conference.

Among the other speakers will be the Rev. Joseph W. Kemp, New York, formerly of London; the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, evangelist; the Rev. Charles Frederick Goss, author and minister; the Rev. Merton S. Rice, Detroit, recently returned from the trenches; Bishop Thomas Nicholson, Chicago; Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, Boston; Prof. A. T. Robertson, Louisville, Ky.; Prof. Camden M. Cobern, Meadville, Pa.; the Rev. P. Y. Pendleton, Cedar Rapids, Ia., and many evangelists and rescue mission workers. Marion Lawrance, Chicago, general secretary International Sunday School association, will give a series of addresses on the Sunday school.

The conference is under the leadership of the Rev. Sol C. Dickey, director, and the Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, associate director.

A commission of fifteen is making a survey of the work of the Disciples churches and work in Cook county, including Chicago. It is the intention to have the commission make its report and recommendation in October as an aid to the outlining of a church program for the coming year. The Rev. Perry J. Rice, executive secretary of the City Missionary society of the Disciples' church, is in general charge of the unified work of the denomination. He has headquarters in the Y. M. C. A., 19 South La Salle street.

On the service flag of St. Ignatius church two of the stars represent priests who are now with the colors. They are the Rev. Henry S. Spalding, S. J., and the Rev. Charles E. Schuetz.

The Rev. Francis Gordon C.R.
PULASKI PHOTO

The Very Rev. Francis Gordon, C. R., is pastor of St. Mary of the Angels Roman Catholic church, Hermitage avenue and Cortland street, which is building one of the largest and most commanding houses of worship in Chicago. Father Gordon has been appointed provincial and delegate general of the Resurrectionist congregation in the United States and Canada, to succeed the Most Rev. Joseph Weber, C. R., D. D., who died in Chicago recently. Father Gordon also is manager of the Polish Daily News.

The new St. Mary of the Angels church building has its exterior completed. The dome is the most conspicuous object in its section of the city. The interior of the church will not be finished for many months. Father Gordon said he expected it would be a year before the church would be ready for dedication. The church will seat 2,000.

Father Gordon was born in Poland, but has been in Chicago since 1881. He received his classical education in the United States and his theological education in the Gregorian university, Rome, Italy. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1889, his first appointment being assistant at St. Stanislaus church. In addition to his parochial duties, Father Gordon has acted as manager of the Polish publication company. He suggested and established the Polish Daily News in 1890. Between 1892 and 1896 he was in Adrianople, Turkey, and in Rome. He organized St. Mary of the Angels church in 1899. He served seven years and then became pastor of St. Stanislaus church for three years, returning to the pastorate of St. Mary of the Angels church in 1909.

At a farewell reception given the Rev. Robert O. Thomas, pastor of the Roseland Presbyterian church, before his departure recently for Y. M. C. A. work in France there were several novel features. The pastor and wife walked from the church door to the platform under an arch of flags held by members of the young people's choirs, who sang "Onward, Christian Soldier." On a table was placed a model of the route from Chicago to France, consisting of a miniature railroad train, a tugboat, and a transport. Mr. Thomas has been pastor of the church eight years, and expects to return. An original poem which was read seems worth reproducing as expressing the good wishes of other congregations to their pastors as well as that of the Roseland church to its pastor. The following is the poem:

WHEN THE DOMINIE COMES BACK.

We're feeling rather sad tonight,
We're all a little blue,
His trunk is gone; his kit is packed,
There's nothing left to do;
There's nothing much to talk about,
And words we seem to lack;
But won't there be rejoicing
When the Dominie
Comes Back.

Of course, we're glad he's going.
We're proud as proud can be.
Our hearts will all go with him
Across the broad blue sea.
We know he'll never falter,
Nor courage ever lack,
But won't there be rejoicing
When the Dominie
Comes Back.

And when despite the U-boat,
That menace of the sea,
He reaches France in safety,
With help and sympathy,
We'll pray the God of Battles
Again and yet again,
To give him power and wisdom
To save our boys and men;
So now we bid him "Godspeed"
Across the watery track,
But won't there be rejoicing
When the Dominie
Comes Back.

A bronze cross of floriated design which will be electrically lighted has been placed on the dome of the Protestant Episcopal cathedral, Washington, D. C. It is ten feet in height and is the highest point in the city with the exception of the Washington monument.

The Rev. A. E. Craig, president of Morningside college, Sioux City, Ia., has resigned to become pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Evansville, Ind. He will receive a salary of $5,000, it is reported in the denominational papers, in view of Evansville having been made the seat of the college formerly located at Moore's Hill, Ind., and known as Moore's Hill college. The trustees are considering naming the college Gresham Memorial college, in honor of James Bethel Gresham, who lost his life in France soon after the United States entered the war.

President Wilson and the department of war have authorized a nation wide campaign for the next two months in behalf of college student enlistment in view of the urgent need of trained men and women.

This campaign is being conducted by the emergency council on education, which is made up of the officers of the Association of American Colleges, Association of American Universities, National Association of State Universities, Catholic Education association, National Education association, and other educational associations of national scope.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly, whose office is at 19 South La Salle street, executive secretary of the council of church boards of education and the Association of American Colleges, has been chosen executive secretary of the emergency council on education for this campaign and will spend August and September in Washington, D. C., 308-311 Munsey building.

The Rev. Smith T. Ford, pastor of the Englewood Baptist church, and Mrs. Ford are at Castle Park, Mich. Dr. Ford, who has been away from his pulpit for many months because of illness, is expecting to return to duty by Sept. 1.

A rescue mission conference will be held at Cedar Lake, Ind., Aug. 14 and 15. George Trotter, president of the Rescue Mission Workers' association; J. A. Nipper, Fort Wayne, Ind., secretary; Mel Trotter, superintendent of the Pacific Garden mission, Chicago, and the Rev. Paul Rader of Moody church will be among the speakers.

The Rev. Joseph C. Backert, chaplain of St. Anthony's hospital, Terre Haute, Ind., is called the champion Red Cross knitter. His record as told by himself follows. The knitting was done on a machine and not by hand, but it was an unusual record nevertheless:

"I have knitted: Sweaters, 224; pairs of wristlets, 75; helmets, 19; mufflers, 5; pairs of socks, 22. Of these about ninety sweaters and sixty pairs of wristlets were sent through the Red Cross. The rest was sent to the soldiers directly through relatives and friends. I have done little knitting since March. On one day in January I made eight sweaters. Most of the time I knit only in the morning. Often I have completed four sweaters in as many hours. With good yarn I have completed a sweater in forty minutes. No charge has been made by me for any of the work."

The 115 stars in the service flag of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal church, Belmont avenue and Broadway, have been arranged in the form of a cross. The lower arm of the cross is left unfinished, signifying others will be going into service. There is one gold star in honor of Harry Dennis Preston, who was killed.

The Rev. George Woods Anderson, who was the evangelist at the Desplaines camp meeting last year and later went into the service of the army Y. M. C. A., wrote and mailed 3,000 letters to mothers and frie the soldier boys on his return to A ica. It took him one month to the letters and he received 4,00 ters of thanks in return. Some o answers said the letter written b Anderson was the first word re since the boys left America.

The Rev. Peter Ainslie of Balt president of the Association for Promotion of Christian Unity, req that at all gatherings of Chri during the summer and fall r tions may be passed regarding unity of christendom.

The men of the Epiphany Prot Episcopal church, Ashland boule and Adams street, have reclaimed lot at Adams and Laflin streets f brick and other rubbish and fitted up for a children's playground.

SLAMS OF LIFE.

By J. P. McEvoy.

THE WEATHER AND YOU.

When the wintry breezes blew
And it snowed and snowed and snew,
And the Arctic zephyrs raw
Ossified your very craw,
And your ears and fingers fell—
Gosh, but you were sorernhel,
And you cussed the icy street,
Cussed the paucity of heat,
Cussed the gelid Arctic breeze
With dexterity and ease,
And a glorious esprit
That was beautiful to see.

Now that winter is no more
And the sun is as of yore,
And you fry an egg with ease
In the coolest passing breeze,
And your perspiration oozes
Till it overflows your shooses,
And your collars are a fizzle
And you little giblets sizzle,
Are you thankful for the heat,
And the bright, sunshiny street
And the little birds that twitter
As they joyfully ker-flitter?
Are you thankful it is hot?
I will answer: You are not.
You believe that you've been sold
Just because it isn't cold;
That the fates have got together
Just to cross you on the weather,
And the isothermic crew
Live to make it tough for you.
And instead of gratitude,
Which you surely should exude,
You're ungrateful to the core
For the heat you hollered for.

MORAL.

When it's hot you yell for cold
With a raucous voice and bold;
When it's cold you want it hot,
Always wanting what is not;
Baked or frozen, frizzed or fried,
You are never satisfied.

P. S. Me, neither.

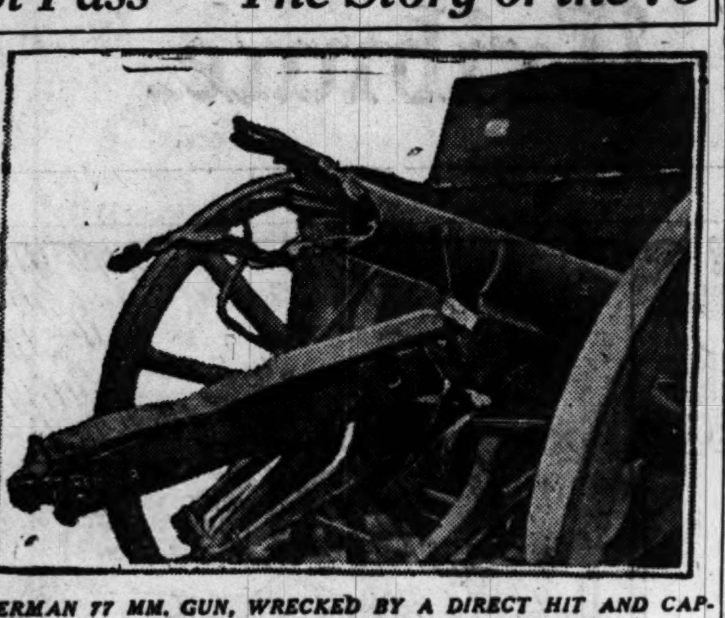
"They Shall Not Pass"—The Story of the 75

By W. J. R. Keates.



GERMAN 77 MM. GUN, WRECKED BY A DIRECT HIT AND CAPTURED BY CANADIANS.

OF all the modern implements of war, perhaps the most famous, both in army circles and civilian life is the light field gun known as the "French 75." It is so-called because its calibre, or diameter of its barrel, is 75 millimeters, or about three inches.

The Germans have paid the highest possible compliment to the French gun—they have imitated it. Of course, being Germans, their imitation is clumsy. Their gun is bigger, heavier, and much less effective, but it is the best they could do. Not even the famous Krupp factory could equal the French gun. The German piece fires a shell of 77 millimeters. This shell makes a curious, whizzing sound in its flight, and explodes with a noise unlike that of any other shell. Therefore the British Tommies, who long ago learned to know all about a shell when it was yet miles away, call the German missile a "whizzbang."

In the eight carloads of war trophies which the French government is sending to Chicago for the United States government war exposition in Grant park from Sept. 2 to 15, there is a "German 77" which was wrecked by a direct hit. The split and broken barrel and the wrecked carriage will be on view. Altogether there will be twenty carloads or more of cannon, rifles, tanks, aeroplanes, shells and other war paraphernalia, some captured by the allies, some used by their own men.

And among the most interesting of all is "La Belle France," a veteran "French 75" which has been retired after three years of terrific service. Like every other article shown, "La Belle France" is genuine, and not a replica. She has thrown death and defiance at the Germans from a hundred bloody fields. Her story is here told:

"La Belle France."

"YEARS ago I and my kin rested quietly in the soil of France, except for the sturdy oak which came from the heart of the Argonne forest—Argonne the stately."

A convulsive sob shook "La Belle France" [for that is the name she was affectionately known by to her gallant crew]. Immediately she regained her composure.

"Pardon, monsieur," the gun began again. "I do hope you did not mistake that for fear; but, oh! when I think of how I last viewed those beautiful trees, monsieur, those beautiful trees among which women and little children played, now bowed and broken more piteously than the old men and women of poor, wronged Belgium, and even more bare.

"It is only in Paris we laugh and are gay, monsieur, and there only because the soldiers are returning from the trenches, and there must be no tears in the eyes of her glorious women.

"Oui, the story, monsieur! You newspaper men in America—how wonderfully practical you are."

There was such a tone in her voice that for a moment I almost forgot "La Belle France" was blind.

"O, yes, the story," the gun resumed.

The Gun's Story.

"I am not going to weary you with the story of how the sons of France sought for me hundreds and hundreds of feet under the ground, and how the metal torn from the earth went through all the refining processes necessary to make me something worthy of the name which I now bear. You who are close to Bethlehem know the story of my creation—at least of my dear American kin. Nor shall I go into the details of assembly, or the final inspection by the ordnance department, which pronounced me perfect.

"One day, however, an order and requisition came from headquarters, and, my! what a flurry of excitement ran through the depot. It was a bright May morning in 1914, and there was going to be a dress parade of the artillery regiment. In order to appear before the president of France there must be one additional 75 to complete their equipment. My! what a hushed air of expectancy in the depot! All was qui vive.

"No rivalry between schoolgirls to be queen of the May [isn't that what you say in America?] was half so keen as the rivalry for this great honor. But as the ordnance officer passed I heard him repeat the number which had been selected, and my heart began to thump and pound, for it was mine!

"Non, non, monsier; that would never do, for, you see, each la belle must be modest, and I could not cry out, 'Here am I!' without arousing great jealousy and being considered bold by the others.

The Onslaught.

"What a bright and glorious day it was, full of the laughter of little children bright and coquettish smiles of beautiful women and proud mien of the martial men of France; men enlisted for defense principally, offense only when our rights or the rights of smaller nations were endangered by a threatening, bullying, blustering autocracy. Not a cloud was in the sky. August was too far away even to see a cloud the size of a man's hand on our clear horizon. When 'lights out' was sounded at the close of the day my heart gave a big sigh of content and happiness.

"Later on little groups of artillerymen would congregate and with heads close together I would occasionally hear the names of countries—Serbia, Russia, England, Belgium, and, oh! how excited they were! One day their demeanor changed and faces once jolly and good natured became grave, and their determined conversation included the names of Germany and Austria. Finally one poilu more vehement than the rest spoke the names of the kaiser and the crown prince, after which he spat viciously upon the ground as if a very bad taste remained in his mouth.

"The call to arms! Oh, what a day, when France forgot all lines of difference and flung herself heart, honor, soul—everything she possessed—into the fray. The day we entrained was a dark and dismal one. Leaden skies hung low, but the spirit of France was in every man's soul and no words but 'Au revoir' were audibly spoken, unless they were 'Pour la France' or 'Vive la France!' No questions were asked, but we finally reached the Marne.

"How gallantly the men of France held the line, you know. But did you know that the river often was red with blood and putrid with men's decaying bodies?"

A sob shook the gun and she shuddered in pitiful silence for the nonce. But in a moment she resumed quietly:

"The front line trenches were a veritable shambles. Rain continuously falling. Men standing waist deep in water which was almost as red with blood as the wine of the vineyards of France. Her heroic sons stood holding by their honor and the honor of their mothers and everything they held sacred in the words immortalized at that battle.

"No bluster, no braggadocio, but a dogged determination that this sacred river of blood of the sons of France should not be bridged by the Boche!

"Three days and three nights they stood without a morsel to eat or a drop to drink with the exception of what was in their knapsacks and canteens. Red Cross ambulances or field kitchens could not penetrate the inferno, so there they stood, never wincing, never complaining, but fighting—fighting for God, for home, and for country.

"When a lull finally came, these poilus were sent to a base hospital back of the lines, and inside of three weeks were all back on the firing line. Pneumonia? Exhaustion? They had no time to think of them."

The Spirit of the Poilu.

Battered and broken, soiled with rust, the veteran 75 smiled from her deep layers of bright burnished steel—her unquenchable heart—at the thought of her brave poilus.

"The women of France," she ran on glibly. "Ah, monsieur, such spirit, such self-sacrifice. Châteaux and palaces, once scenes of splendor, immediately were turned into hospitals and recreation centers for returning troops. Wonderful linens, hallowed by memories too sacred to speak of, and only brought out on 'state occasions,' were brought and laid on the altar of sacrifice, for our hospitals then were unable to properly handle the great number of wounded and dying men constantly being brought in; dead men were removed and placed under the beds to make room for the wounded arrivals, and not infrequently men were placed upon beds upon which was pooled the blood of other men who had been but recently removed, blood not yet congealed.

"And yet, today, when you ask why in spite of all these hardships the French do not complain, the answer comes so quickly in that matter of fact phrase, 'C'est la guerre.'

"Yes, I, too, was slightly wounded on several occasions, once seriously enough to be returned to the ordnance department for repairs, but after a short furlough I was permitted to return to the front.

"No, the Huns did not disable me. I am simply worn out, warworn in the service of liberty, and I can no longer fight. But I was asked to come overseas and continue my work in helping reëstablish the democracies of the earth, to carry a message of gratitude to the American people, and to tell them how proud the people of France are to have your sons, brothers, and sweethearts as comrades in arms.

"It is, indeed, a great honor for me to be with you and to view all your wonderful spirit and speedy preparation. It nearly broke my heart to leave France. How I begged that they should not dress and clean me up as though for a reception.

Before Verdun.

"I told them the people of America would appreciate me more if I still carried the sacred soil of Verdun upon my wheels—almost direct from the front—and that I would tell them how our gallant gun crew refused to desert me in the retreat, even though I had been condemned as unfit for service. I was a little more selfish, though, than they thought. I could not bear to think I was to be entirely separated from the soil of the scarred but sacred battlefields of France.

"Ah, monsieur, did you see that cute little Blue Devil—the smallest of the lot? That little rascal was a deserter. He was in a hospital depot not far from Paris convalescing when reports of a violent engagement were brought to him. He immediately left and returned to his company and entered the engagement. It was not until his arrival in New York that he reported this to his superior officer, as, no doubt by that time, in accordance with French military discipline, he had been listed as a deserter.

"Then there was a stern faced fellow with big, fierce mustachios—ah! his is a sad, sad story. He had a nice little home in northern France and a beautiful wife and family. He answered the call, but his home was burned, his wife and children taken prisoners into Germany.

"No, monsieur, he does not know what has become of them. He can only guess. That's why he looks so fierce and fights so hard. He has five wound stripes on his arm. There are hundreds of other soldiers like him, and their hearts cry perpetually. And their cry is, 'O, that I knew that they were dead.'"

A sigh escaped Mlle. 75.

"It is growing late; the band has played 'Home, Sweet Home,' and I must bid you adieu," the gun remarked again wistfully, and then straightened stiffly on her wheel supports.

"Just this parting message," she began anew. "My voice speaks now only to America. I have done my part. I am warworn in service. But my kin over there—the same family that spoke first at Mons and on down through Ypres, Somme, Vimy Ridge to Picardy—will continue to speak for civilization until the voice of Prussian autocracy has been stilled. They will fight on and on beside your own true sons of Bethlehem and Carnegie until victory."

The voice of Mlle. 75 was husky by now and she was eager for rest.

"Come in again," essayed La Belle France finally, "and I will tell you more. Au revoir, monsieur."

Barbusse Replies to Critic

SOME weeks ago Maj. L. C. Eckenfelder wrote for THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE an article condemning Henri Barbusse's "Under Fire" as an insidious piece of socialistic propaganda and as falsifying the spirit of the poilu and the conditions in the French army. His criticism has brought forth the following translated letters from M. Barbusse and Edmond Rostand, the latter the author of "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Chanticler," etc. M. Barbusse's letter is addressed to Mr. Hugh R. Dent.

Dear Mr. Dent: I learn by the newspapers that a French officer on a mission to America has given a lecture at Chicago in which he has forcibly criticized "Le Feu." This action, of which THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE speaks, and on which certain French reactionary and clerical papers comment, has surprised me. I did not think that the maneuvers of my political enemies, that is to say, the antidemocratic elements in France, would go as far as utilizing official action against me, and especially since the minister of public instruction has just recently again (?) nominated me a member of the consultative committee on French propaganda in foreign countries.

However that may be, I think there is no reason to leave the attack unanswered. On reflection, the best way seems to me to send to you, so that you may rely on it, a letter that I take from among the thousands I have received on the subject of "Le Feu." It is from Edmond Rostand, whose prestige in America must be considerable. I send you a copy of it, begging you to send it in your turn to the United States, to have it published in the papers, and thus counterbalance the unjust and absurd opinion of which a Frenchman has thought fit to make himself the echo over yonder.

I am for a few hours in Paris at the above address. Believe me, etc.,

HENRI BARBUSSE.

P. S. I have no need to tell you that the ideas in my book commending the continuation of the war against German militarism and (commending) a lasting peace by the union of the democracies are exactly those commended by the great voice of President Wilson, to whom I have often done homage in articles. The divergency of opinions referred to by Rostand are exclusively concerned with the religious question and that of the glory belonging to the common soldiers.

The Rostand letter forwarded by M Barbusse is as follows:

My Dear Friend: I admire "Le Feu" because it is a poem—a great poem—tumultuous and admirably arranged. There is in it what I like most in the world, infinite detail, with meretricious glitter. Such detail is only permissible against a background of inspiration and epic movement. Visionary and man inspired, you are both; that is doubtless why your book commands the admiration even of those who do not accept all the opinions in it. All whom I have heard discussing it up to the present are unanimously agreed on its literary beauty and its tremendously real significance.

I remember the day when you came to say to me: "Voila; I am enlisting because I hate war. The more one thinks as I do, the greater is the necessity to shoulder a rifle this time, which must be the last." Again I see the calm and terrible beauty in your face, and your implacable pallor. It is just that beauty, the frigid and sublime anger in your look, the tranquil exasperation on your features, the haut poetry that mysteriously surrounded you, the noble hatred which from time to time straightened your tall figure with a start, as you seemed to be already stooping over the stretchers in immense compassion—it is just that beauty that I have completely found again in "Le Feu." At that moment I knew as I embraced you that you would bring back from the war a masterpiece of tragedy. I did not know at the time that it would mean the institution of the Croix de Guerre.

That I am not absolutely of your opinion on one or two points you will readily imagine, but when a man comes back from where you have been he has a right to say everything and must be given at least a respectful hearing. To hold our tongues and ponder all they tell us, who have been out there, is our sole duty of the moment.

I find, in a poem written a year ago, when I was returning from seeing our silent defenders at the front:

"Heroes!" my look said. "No," Replied their silence; "We Are only men." That's less—and better!

Your work proves to me that my impression was the right one. You have modeled in the mud of the trenches the enduring statue of the new soldier. When you passionately cover the war with mud, in spite of yourself that mud is magnificent. You give to those consecrated beings the glory which you say they must not have. And why should they not have it, the saviors of the world and of the future? You have it, yourself, in that you have portrayed them!

It is a splendid thing to have written a romance from which history will borrow. We will discuss other points later. Meanwhile, superb poet and soldier, I embrace you.

EDMOND ROSTAND.

A COOLING REFLECTION

By Guy F. Lee.

(Written on Chicago's hottest August day—102 in the shade—Aug. 5.)

It's impossible to sleep and hard to eat,
And the bath tub is the only spot that's cool;
Frigid prohibition draughts are incomplete,
And the drinks with "kick" aren't chilling, as a rule.
There is very little comfort in a smoke,
And the thought of work inspires words of sin;
But beside a place I know, this heat's a joke:
That's the future home of William of Berlin.

It is torrid here, and horrid: All in all
It is much the same as Sherman said of war;
But the coming lake breeze never pays a call
In the land Bill Hohenzollern's headed for.
So I'm well content to swelter and to sweat,
And I'm happy as I stew and fume; and grin
As I think of weather forecasts to be met
By the kaiser when he's driven from Berlin!

Why They Laugh in Vaudeville

RIALTO.

Sid Lewis: When Riley first landed in this country there were a lot of things he didn't know. One day he came down to the dock, just in time to see his friend O'Brien, who was fishing, pull a big crab out of the water. Riley's hair began to stand on end, and he jumped three feet into the air. "Kill him, Michael!" he shouted. "Kill him! He's the father of all them bed bugs at the Mills hotel!"

Riley was only married a week when he discovered his wife was inclined to be stingy, especially in the way she provided for the table. One afternoon while Riley was planting vegetables in his back garden, his wife came to the kitchen door and in a loud voice called out to him: "Come in to tay, toast, and foive eggs."

Riley dropped his spade in astonishment and hurried into the kitchen. "Surely you're only kiddin' me," he said.

"No," says his wife, "it's the neighbors I'm kidding."

One time Mrs. Riley found herself in the hospital with a severely bitten arm. The surgeon dressed the wound, and as he did so remarked: "I cannot make out what sort of an animal bit you. The wound is too small for a horse's bite and too big for a dog's."

"O, it wasn't an animal," said Mrs. Riley. "It was another lady."

THE HUN AND THE HERMITAGE—By Horace Townsend

One of the greatest of European national galleries has fallen, or is about to fall, into greedy German hands.

"ONE subject on which I crave enlightenment," said a well known New York picture collector to me the other day, "is as to what has become of the famous Hermitage gallery's collection of pictures in Petrograd. My own impression is that the German government has already made arrangements for taking them over and removing them to Berlin. Dr. Bode, of course, knows intimately every picture in the collection and has doubtless informed his imperial master as to their value for museum purposes."

There is no little significance in this apprehension, for, despite their barbaric destroyal of French and Belgian works of architectural import, despite even their wanton destruction of the great library in Louvain, the Germans have betrayed a very keen appreciation of the possibilities of loot. Nothing seems to have appealed to their predatory instinct in greater degree than the historical paintings and works of art which they have found in the overrun territories. Cathedrals and cloth halls, such as those of the Reims and Ypres, could not be carried off easily into Germany as could world famous pictures, and so the former were revengefully annihilated while the latter were packed up for conveyance to Berlin.

It must not be supposed, however, that this looting of public and private collections has been in any way unorganized or a random affair. That is not the German way. In the first place their very efficient spy system has put in the possession of the military authorities a complete inventory of every collection in Belgium, France, or Russia, and in the second their own museum experts have devoted much of their time and attention to informing themselves as to the habitat and compiling estimates of the comparative values of every picture, statue, and work of art in Europe.

THUS it was an easy matter for these experts, through the Grand staff, to have word conveyed to the troops in the field as to where to look for examples of peculiar merit and which, when discovered, were worth commandeering in the name of the government and which might safely be left to form part of the loot, or, in other words, the thefts, of the regimental officers. Foremost among these so-called experts, or artistic scavengers, is undoubtedly Dr. Wilhelm Bode, whose name is widely known, not only as director of the Kaiser Friedrich Museum in Berlin, but as the author of many books on artistic subjects and as the provoker of more than one heated discussion on matters of interest to collectors.

It is not difficult to gather the German official attitude towards these things. There is the story, for instance, of the Greek statue recently exhumed near Corfu, which was sold recently in Paris. It was bought at public sale by a dealer, shipped to Switzerland, and now adorns one of the salons of the Kaiser Friedrich museum. Then there is the story, which seems to be founded on fact, that the shelling of Louvain was so directed by authority as to spare the church of St. Pierre from which, when the troops entered the city, the celebrated panels by Quentin Matsys were removed and shipped to Berlin, and finally it was told to me at first hand by one who was present that before the entrance of Italy into the war, a German customer of the well known dealer of Florence, Sig. Bardini, observed laughingly, "Well, you may ask what you like for that bas-relief, for before very long we shall be able to take it for nothing."

That sums up in a phrase the Hun mentality. To take everything in sight and for nothing is the main end and purpose of warfare. With these facts in mind one can only regard the future of the famous Hermitage collection with a rather hopeless foreboding. It is said, of course, in Petrograd that the Bolshevik authorities, if such there be, have taken pains to conserve the pictures in what is really Russia's National gallery, in the interests of the people. But it needs no great stretch of imagination to imagine Dr. Bode and his companions complacently licking their lips as they scan the list of masterpieces therein to be found. It will be a comparatively easy matter to force their delivery to Germany even if they are not stolen outright. And in this case the game is worth many candles.

IT was in the latter half of the XVIII. century that the Empress Catherine II. founded the collection of the Hermitage, which took its name from the Winter palace, in which it was originally housed. The collections of Counts Gobztowski, Bruhl, and de Croza of the Baron de Thiers, the Duc de Choiseul, and Sir Robert Walpole formed its nucleus. During the following century the Czars Alexander I., Nicholas I., and Alexander III., added to its treasures, drawing the pictures from many celebrated collections, and in 1850 the Emperor Nicholas I. built the present galleries from the designs of a German architect.

I do not think it is generally recognized what a carefully selected and noteworthy collection that of the Hermitage gallery really is. Though quality, rather than quantity, seems to have been the text of those responsible for it, it yet reflects, in a very curious manner, their personal idiosyncracies. Thus we find the Italian school of the Fourteenth century but poorly represented. With the exception of a fresco by Fra Angelico in shockingly bad condition, there is no picture of any importance belonging to the period. A little later on, however, and the Italian school is admirably represented. There is, for instance, a magnificent Francia. A Virgin and Child, flanked by saints with delightful angels playing musical instruments below, and there is a fine Boticelli, an "Adoration of the Magi," which shows him at his very best. Then there is a "Judith," by Giorgone, and several pictures from the brush of Raffaello Sanzio, including a fine "St. George and the Dragon," as well as the lovely "Conestabile Madonna," and the celebrated "Madonna della Casa d'Alba."

There are a characteristic "Holy Family" by Andrea del Sarto and the "Little Madonna" with the nursing child by Leonardo da Vinci, a tenderly beautiful "Virgin and Child" by Luini, another by Correggio, and one by Titian, as well as four other pictures by that great artist. Veronese is represented by a subject picture of the "Finding of Moses by Pharaoh's Daughter" and Tintoretto by a "Birth of the Virgin," with a multiplicity of figures, while Bordone, Bronzino, Guido Reni, Carlo Dolci, and even such late masters as Canaletto and Tiepolo are well represented.

Examples of the Spanish school at the Hermitage include over a dozen of works by Murillo, among which are a typical "Immaculate Conception" and an "Assumption," as well as some studies of peasant life and a number of religious subject pictures. There are also several fine portraits and a subject piece by Velazquez, as well as canvases by Coello, Zurbarban, and Ribera.

But the schools of the Netherlands and Holland form the chief glories of the Hermitage. The Flemish pictures begin with primities, such as Jan van Eyck, Roger van Weyden, Gerard David, and Lucas van Leyden, and reach to the great Rubens, of whom there are here no fewer than thirty-five examples, among which is to be found his celebrated portrait of Helena Fourment, which once belonged to Sir Robert Walpole and Anthony van Dyck, who contributes over a score of works. Here also are pictures by Jordaens, Snyder's "Velvet," Breughel, and David Teniers.

Of fine Rembrandts the Hermitage possesses more than any other national gallery in Europe, as many as thirty-nine being here shown, portraits, Biblical pictures, and subject piece—all except landscapes—are here, and it is fair to say that this group alone would confer dignity upon any of the world's great gatherings of pictures. But Rembrandt is not the only Dutchman exemplified. There are paintings by Pieter de Hooch, Jan Steen, Ruysdael, Frans Hals, Gerard Dow, Albert Cuyp, and Van der Helst, all interesting and some of them surpassingly so.

Among the names of French painters are such familiar ones as Clouet, Philippe de Champagne, Nicolas Poussin, Claude Lorrain, Pierre Mignard, Antoine Watteau, Nicolas Lancret, Greuze, Boucher, and Chardin, while England is not forgotten, for there are portraits by Kneller, Dobson, and Lawrence, and two magnificent pictures, one of them painted for the Empress Catherine, by Sir Joshua Reynolds. This list gives but a glimpse of the glories of the Hermitage, which there is only too much reason to believe will fall, temporarily only, it is to be hoped, into the all embracing arms of the Hun. Perhaps they have already so fallen—who knows?

Vaudeville Wit

M'VICKER'S.

O'Neil and Wolmsley:

"When I'm singing I quickly completely forget my surroundings. The public disappears entirely."

"I don't wonder at that."

"I'm ambitious. What's the quickest way to get ahead?"

"Drink plenty of whisky; that will give you a 'head' the next morning."

"I try to act like a lady."

"O, yes, you are a good actress."

"You look like some one I know."

"You look like some one I don't want to know."

"What is your sister doing now?"

"She's a burlesque actress?"

"Is she doing well?"

"Making a bare living."

"Would you marry a man to reform him?"

"No, sir; you can't make a good omelet out of a bad egg."

"I own a dictionary and it's all complete except for one word."

"How is it that one word is missing?"

"I've cut out 'whisky.'"

"Your extravagance will have to cease sooner or later."

"Very well, then, make it later."

"What is a vacuum?"

"I have it in my head, but I can't just think of it."

RIALTO.

Jones and Jones:

"Today I tried to kiss a girl nearly seven feet tall."

"My goodness, what were you up to?"

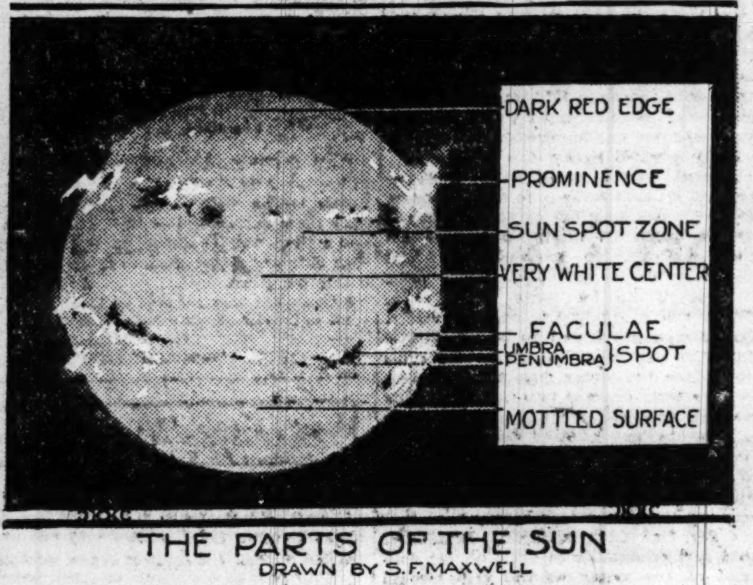
"Up to her hips."

"I saw a shooting star last night."

"I wonder what causes shooting stars."

"I guess they get jealous of one another."

ASTRONOMY



THE PARTS OF THE SUN
DRAWN BY S.F. MAXWELL

OUR MARVELOUS SUN.

THE sun is so bright that it is impossible to study its surface directly, and so special means must be adopted for observing it. The simplest device is a very thick piece of colored glass which absorbs almost all the light and heat. Various kinds of color screens are used to bring out the different features on the sun. A deep red glass reveals the clouds of hydrogen gas, violet shows calcium vapor, while suitable combinations reveal the murky red glow around the edge. In addition, a spectroscope is employed to show the gases and flames which play above the surface of the great ball.

The outermost layer of the sun is comparatively dark, and reveals its presence by absorbing some of the light emanating from below. At the edge of the disc, where we are looking through the greatest thickness it colors the sunlight a coppery red. It is this light which gives the peculiar hue to the landscape during a solar eclipse.

Below the absorbing layer is the chromosphere. The characteristic color of the sun is determined by this layer. The gases composing it glow with every color of the rainbow. The photosphere lies below the chromosphere. This is the lowest layer of the sun of which we have direct knowledge. It is made of gases under great pressure and is four times as hot as the core of an electric arc. The photosphere glows with a very intense white light. Most of the light of the sun comes from this layer.

Sun spots and faculae are a characteristic feature of the solar atmosphere. The former are downward moving whirlpools. The cooler vapors of the absorbing layer are being drawn into the body of the sun, and by their more powerful absorption give the area the appearance of being dark. The faculae are jets from the photosphere which are being forced up through the chromosphere and absorbing layer, and being so very much hotter than their surroundings they appear white. Prominences are unusually large faculae and are sometimes seen to mount 300,000 miles above the sun's surface in a few hours.

The sun embodies many examples of the development of stars in its various parts. The hot inner sphere resembles Sirius and the white stars, while the absorbing layer in like Arcturus or Antares, and the spots resemble the very red stars.

PEACE APPROACHES.

In England there is a party which persistently urges peace advances to Germany. The Nation and the Manchester Guardian seem to be its principal mouthpieces and its chief assumption is that German and Austrian statesmen have tried repeatedly to make peace overtures, but have been ruthlessly rebuffed by the allied governments.

This seems to us a grotesquely topsy turvy view of the situation, having the same source as the pacifism which before the war was all for keeping the peace by keeping helpless to make war. The Emperor Carl's letter, the various ambiguous pronouncements of various foreign secretaries, the reichstag majority terms, promptly kicked in the discard as soon as the Russian collapse promised military success in the west, all this is feverishly built into the theory that Germany has been ready for months to make a "reasonable peace."

Now that President Wilson, whom at first it extolled, has confessed himself thoroughly "disillusioned" as to German good faith and has faced the necessity for military victory as an essential to an endurable peace, the Nation's enthusiasm for him has waned and there is great anxiety lest America should put her terms too high.

Certainly neither Mr. Wilson nor the American people want to make war a minute longer than is necessary to insure the sort of peace we can accept as worth the price the allies and ourselves have paid. But the British peace group, if it expects to impress us, must bring forward something which common sense will accept as evidence that there is really a party or a body of opinion, capable of controlling German policy, which has in good faith any desire to make the sort of peace we are after. What is the use of nibbling at the disappearing diplomatic bait of the Wilhelmstrasse when all the weight of evidence in Germany's acts and the whole temper of German intellectual leadership points one way? Why does the Nation give so little weight to a body of evidence, which has literally forced itself upon pacific America, reluctant as we were to resort to the extremity of bloodshed or to involve ourselves in the complex of European relations?

What, for example, does the compromise group make of the following specimen of the German code? It is Prof. Meinecke, a historian, writing in the Neue Rundschau of June, and he finds the approval of the Cologne Gazette:

"The ban of trench warfare, which for so long has hampered our speculations, has been broken. We might be able—this would doubtless be the highest attainable military success—by a series of tremendous battles and breaks-through in the course of the summer, to force the English and American armies to evacuate the continent and to leave France to our superior power. If England and America then showed themselves determined to prolong the war indefinitely, as a pure naval and blockade war, we should, if we are in a position to break the stubbornness of France by force, have no further political reason to spare her, for there is no prospect of her becoming a possible ally. Improvement of the Vosges frontier and annexation of the ore basin of Briey would then be demands which can doubtless be reconciled with reasonable and moderate (sic) statesmanship.

"If, on the other hand, England and America, this being the situation, showed themselves ready for a general peace, we should have to consider our conditions against France in a different light. Doubtless we should then possess against England the pressure not only of the continued submarine war, but also of the menace to Egypt and Mesopotamia by the masses of troops which we should have free. On the other hand, England and America would possess the pressure of the continued blockade war. On both sides there will then be a careful calculation of what can be gained or lost by a continuation of the war. We should have a longer lever than at the time of our peace offer. But reason must on both sides recommend a compromise peace."

What is the use of trying to talk terms with a nation in that state of mind, unless we are beaten, which we are not? True, one professor does not make a nation, but this sort of talk is all through intellectual Germany and it is backed by German arms. Perhaps we shall have a change of tone now, as hitherto whenever German fortunes fell, but we shall be greater fools than we think we are if we yield to it. The cost to civilization of a prolonged war, we realize, will be heavy, but the allies can go on awhile yet, and longer than Germany, rather than accept the terms that Prussianism would exact. When Germany, the invader and destroyer, is ready to talk peace, let her speak in terms unconquered peoples will hear with patience. She has not yet done so. Until she does the bleatings of the peace group seem to us contemptible.

THE SOLDIER VOTE.

Intelligent concern regarding the soldier vote recognizes all the difficulties in the way of taking it, and for that reason, although intensely interested in such a problem as the abstraction of so large a part of the electorate from important decisions, does not grow demagogic.

We can imagine decisions of the greatest importance to the republic which might need, for their safe determination, the weight of the soldier vote. It is not a small thing to deduct from the voting population so large a body of voters as is represented in the army in France.

Such a deduction might be equivalent to a decision. The matter is weightier because upon certain questions it may be rationally assumed that the soldier vote is the sanest vote in the United States. It has had the greatest experience. It may have the soundest judgment. To eliminate this experience and this judgment from American political decisions might have a profound effect upon the American future.

There is the practical question of the military effect of political campaigning upon the troops. Theoretically it might be disastrously confusing. Actually we imagine it would be small. An American army subjected to the doses of exhortation which an American community gets at election time would cause a commander to tear his hair. That need not be.

What we should like to see would be the operation of a method which would preserve the opinion of this very important body of American men upon questions which vitally concern the American nation. It seems unfortunate that any decisions, the consequences of which they must abide, should be made while they are voiceless. There are practical perplexities and intricacies which cannot be met by any rule of thumb, but there ought to be a way, found in rational practicality, by which the opinion of the army in France could be obtained upon questions worthy of submission to its opinion.

If such a way cannot be found the United States may arrive, sooner or later during the war, at some decisions which do not represent the opinion of its best informed and most experienced citizens.

It would be disastrous to turn a camp into a town meeting and it might be damaging to expose an army to volleys of pamphlets from the rear, but it certainly would be beneficial to canvass soldier opinion when the nation is making great decisions.

PREPARING FOR THE LOAN.

The organization for the next Liberty loan drive, which, it is announced, will begin Sept. 28, is an immediate matter of individual concern. The drive will probably proceed with many of the spectacular and irrelevant features of the third campaign. The sentimental appeal will be direct, the stern reproach for suspected slackers more direct. Young women in spangles will hang from wires, ropes, and trapeze rungs by their toes; young men will batter each other's noses with boxing gloves; the exhorter who delights to exhort will have his delight, and men in uniform will buttonhole men not in uniform.

All this presumably. It went in that fashion in the third drive, and, allowing for originality in design and a desire for novelty, it probably will go in about that fashion in the fourth drive. A democracy works by emotion up to the point where its necessities drive it to compulsion, and we have not as yet, except by taxation, separated a man from his money other than by the play on his emotions, against his sense of shame, in his love of accomplishment and service, using the emotions which make him important to himself and worthy to live and be respected.

But the foundation of the success of the loan drive is being laid, has been laid, or must be laid in the quite unemotional accounting which citizens in their sober moments take of themselves and their circumstances. In this accounting there is seen the need of a modification of normal life because life is no longer normal. Its play is not as free, its necessities are importunate, its sacrifices great.

Life is now war life and the scheme of the average fellow is changed. It has to be changed and after the government has intervened here and there, with a provision as to the ounces of bread which may be eaten in a restaurant, with the prohibition against a bottle in the hip pocket, with a decree against the double breasted coat, etc., etc., it remains up to the individual so to order the essentials of his economy that he will have in pocket or prospect the money which the government needs on the loan.

His emotions will not produce money out of an empty pocket. His revised scheme of life may. If without the exhortation of the exhorter, the restraining hand of the man in uniform or the spangles of the tight rope walker, he has arranged his affairs to take a bond, knows how the money is coming because he knows where it is not going, he becomes the citizen who can satisfy his emotions with the fruit of his accomplishment.

MILITARY HISTORY IN COLLEGES.

Most if not all of the leading American universities and colleges have established courses in military science. Primarily this is a measure of war emergency, to assist or supplement our regular officers' training camps and hasten the preparation of an adequate officers' corps for our rapidly expanding army.

What will happen to these courses after the war? That will depend upon what scope and nature our system of defense is. If we collapse into pacifism and unpreparedness, as after all our other wars, doubtless these courses will lapse. If we have a system of universal military training they can be very usefully articulated with that system.

But in any event we devoutly hope that military history, especially our own, will never again be ignored by our collegiate education. If Gen. Upton's "History of Our Military Policy" had been made the basis of a short course in all our colleges, there would have been an intelligent public opinion back of the preparedness movement, which it deplorably lacked up to the outbreak of the European war. The nation was defenseless, but our educated classes, including our leaders of public thought and action, were ignorant of the lessons of our natural experience and ignorant of military values or the progress of military science.

Yet knowledge of the essentials of national defense is one of the basic requirements of intelligent democratic citizenship. We have neglected it and we are paying for it—not so high a price as we may yet pay if we continue to neglect, but high enough, we hope, to warn us effectually. Our colleges ought to provide and insist upon a certain citizen knowledge, and knowledge of what defense means is one of the essentials. We had college pacifist societies of callow youth. We had no antidote for their confident theorizing. History supplied it, but college historians did not.

Let us learn this lesson at least.

Editorial of the Day

EXCELSIOR EXCELLED.

[From the Baltimore Sun.]

At the meeting of the national women's Liberty loan committee in Chicago, where arrangements were made for participation in the next Liberty loan campaign, feminine patriotism reached the top notch of sacrifice. Three ladies came forward with a banner bearing a new and strange device, under which women bent on winning the war are begged to march. "No new dresses" was Mrs. Ella Flagg Young's slogan, to which Mrs. A. S. Baldwin of San Francisco added, "No new hat ornaments." The trinity of idealism was completed in Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip's pronunciamento, "No new clothes for the children."

Can American women live up to such an exalted standard of self-denial? Nothing else could put such an excruciating strain upon their patriotism. Let us hope that they will stand firm against their special weakness. But we cannot help recalling what Hamlet said when the player queen fervently affirmed her undying love—"She doth protest too much." Let us hope the feminine vow made at Chicago may not prove a mere oratorical camouflage. But, O girl, where hats and dresses are concerned, thy name is frailty.

The "Bit" and "All"

BY PRIVATE HAROLD R. PEAT.

"BAH!" it was a short, stocky, dark man who spoke, "the English are doing their 'bit,' but we are doing our best and all!" I should have liked to stay and speak to the two men. After all ignorance and the unconsidered repetition of insidious enemy propaganda are much the same thing. England has had too much to do in doing her bit to publish what a bit means. The English are quite as slangy a race in speech as we of Canada or the states. "Bit" is a slang term born of the war. "Bit" to a man who is doing it may mean giving up his business, his happiness, his fortune, or his life. No nation can do more, but it takes every individual member of a nation to lend a hand else the bit is not done at all, not begun to be done.

I saw in an English paper a dignified response to an undignified criticism of what she had done and was doing. "Later we may tell of what we are doing and what we have done; now we are too busy burying our dead."

If you can't understand the term "bit," don't adopt it. Trifling inconvenience—substituting corn bread for wheat one day a week par example—that isn't a bit. There is a difficulty, I know, in deciding what to do back of the line. The soldier's work is laid out for him; he knows he has to fight or die or both. The folks at home, 3,000 miles from the actual fighting front in France and many thousand miles farther back of other fighting fronts where no American soldiers have been as yet, have to find their own bit.

Away back in 1914 we boys were crazy to get to the front. We chafed at the delays. We were threatened with being held back a matter of half a dozen weeks. We thought the war would be over before we got there. That was in 1914. Because this is 1918 don't be any the less impatient to get into step with the fighting boys. The war might finish quicker than we anticipate, and it might just as likely last much longer. Either way, it is the job of every man and woman to get in now.

I REMEMBER one chap saying: "This is going to be a dandy trip to Europe." He lasted through the Dardanelles. He got shot through both arms, then refused to go back to the dressing station because there was no one to take his place. Ten minutes later a bullet finished him through the lungs. He had done his bit. Then there was Jimmy, his pal; he got caught on the barbed wire and never came back; and the last one of the trio, Mac—I don't think anyone knew his full name—he went through three years of it with not a scratch and for each year a horse had been shot down under him. He was allowed long furlough, but he would not talk war. It was only after reading newspapers, knowing Mac was mentioned in Gen. Haig's dispatches and absolutely plying him with questions, that we got any information.

"Dispatches? Oh—yes—pal got caught out in No Man's Land. It was daylight, so the Boches could see. They were potting at him, so I went out and brought him in. That was all. Yes, they saw us both, opened machine gun fire, but they did not touch us."

A bit?

The boys never tell what they have done. It is not false modesty. It is sheer inability to realize that they accomplish more than duty or more than the other fellow. They do not mention the words "best" or "all." They insist, if decorated, that the other fellow deserves as much and if only those in authority can see every brave deed every man would have a medal of distinction. The level is high. They, the boys, set it. We who have been over there and are back know we must continue on that level, and it's up to the folks at home to smooth the way, and if possible go higher still.

YOU, back of the lines, can write letters. Write cheery letters. Write jokes and pleasant things. Don't recount worries and miseries and small things which you may count privations. Keep cheerful for our sakes. Laugh when you can. Send the boys off with a smile.

That wide question of the send off. It is not thought of sufficiently on this side as yet; but it will be. I remember at one city station in Canada where the deputation of hundreds who gathered daily to see the boys pass through had among them a lady with her baby boy. Suddenly one of the older men spied the baby and looked at it longingly. The mother held the little mite up for a kiss. That started it. The baby passed from hand to hand down the length of three coaches where men were leaning out of the windows and received a kiss from each khaki clad man. Unsanitary—yes; no doubt, but such a wealth of love, such a memory for the men going to offer their lives for the safety of just such little God given atoms of humanity as this.

I have seen the draft boys leaving towns in the States. The train has pulled out in dead silence from a station empty of anyone but such as were about their own immediate business. The boys had not a flag, not a ribbon of red or white or blue, not even a bit of chalk to write slogans on the coach sides. There are canteen workers at various centers, I know, but there should be something at every station.

It is difficult, I know, to get things organized, to make matters run smoothly from the beginning. Everything is new, everybody is a novice at the work. Often there is friction and blocking. It is a sad solution, but the first casualty to come among the members of any organization will clear the air. There will be, there always is, such an outpouring of love and sympathy to the stricken family that differences are forgotten all round. Then it is that each one realizes, "Ours may be the next—what are we doing?" Then it is that all learn each one is necessary to the work; then it is the folk back home realize that they are the second line of defense.

There are the boys in the cantonments to be entertained and watched over. There are preparations to be made for the reception and rehabilitation of the returned men; there is the care of the dependents of men not so well favored with the world's goods as others.

There is only one secret of doing a "bit" or all. Never ceasing effort to win the war. Never ending realization that it must be won and won right for all time or it will be repeated even more dreadfully than now. That is what is back of the struggle between the troops in the field. That is what must be back of the people at home. They must present a united front.

It is in your hands, folks at home—in your conscience. There is no excuse for idleness. The "want to do but don't know what" spirit is a camouflage of indifference, carelessness, selfishness, laziness. There is work for everyone. There is dire need of everyone's work.

Do your bit, as the soldier has done his, and you will have done your all.

SHOCKING NEWS.

Fancy dresses were decidedly in her line, and her life ambition was to keep up the deception of youthful appearance.

TYPHOID FEVER.

FOR nearly four years approximately 20,000,000 soldiers have been in the field all the time. During that time, in spite of the fact that some of the armies came from countries where but little attention is paid to sanitation and hygiene, and some of them were poorly equipped with physicians and sanitarians, no army has had to stop on account of typhoid fever.

In fact, no army has been particularly discommoded by the ravages of this disease. At first there was a small amount of the disease. This was because most of the armies were hurriedly thrown together and it takes time to perfect machinery for the protection of health. During the last two or three years cases of typhoid fever in the army hospitals on the western fronts have been as scarce as white blackbirds.

For just about one year we have had a million men in training in camps in this country. Typhoid fever has been so rare that the reports of diseases prevalent in camps have no heading for the disease. Most of these camps are located in southern states. If the soldiers in the camps have had no death rate from typhoid fever there is no excuse for typhoid death rates of 20 to 30 per 100,000 among the civilians living in the states where the camps are located. Most of the soldiers have come from northern states. If these boys have had no typhoid fever there is no excuse for typhoid death rates of 10 to 20 among the civilians from whose ranks the newly trained soldiers were drawn.

To illustrate the difference between typhoid fever among soldiers and among civilians Dr. V. C. Vaughan said that had the Delaware typhoid rate prevailed among the soldiers in the training camps in 1917 there would have been 50,000 soldiers with typhoid in the hospitals. About 5,000 of them would have died.

Now that it has been proven that no one need have typhoid every one is interested in knowing enough about the disease to enable him to protect himself. The typhoid bacillus is closely akin to the colon bacillus. It does not thrive anywhere except in the human animal. Outside the body it dies off after a short time. It cannot live in ordinary drinking water for as long as a month. The city of London depends largely on storing for a month to make its river water supply safe. The bacillus lives even a shorter time in sewage.

In the case of drinking water the bacillus is killed by sunlight, air, and a general unsuitability of its surroundings. In the case of sewage it is killed off by other organisms in addition to the factors which destroy it in drinking water. The length of life of bacilli in ice is also short. It has been proven that when typhoid bacilli are frozen in ice they begin dying at once and all of them are dead in a month or two. Ice that is five months old is reasonably certain to be free from typhoid bacilli.

In some communities the bulk of the typhoid is due to polluted water; in other places to milk; in still others to contact with cases or carriers of typhoid; in some, flies are the chief factor responsible for spreading the disease. Oysters and vegetables are responsible for some cases. The bacilli enter the human body by way of the mouth. If enough of them are present some will get through the stomach without being killed, although the stomach juice is destructive to most of them.

In the intestines they multiply. They enter the intestinal wall in the lower end of the small intestine, producing typhoid ulcers. Most of these are located in certain lymph glands called Peyer's patches. About ten days' time is required for the bacilli to travel down the intestines, enter the Peyer's patches, and get the stage set for the fever. This is known as the incubation period.

In finding out where a severe infection was contracted the customary method is to fix as nearly as possible the first day of illness and then to count back ten days to find the day on which the infection occurred. The water, milk, vegetables, oysters, and all other food ingested for a day or two before and the same length of time afterward should be investigated. Likewise the places where meals were eaten, the cooks and waiters preparing the meals, and the general sanitary conditions should be investigated.

About the time the fever starts typhoid bacilli are found in the blood. The fever starts with a slight afternoon rise. The next day there is a slight morning fever, and a higher afternoon rise. During the first week the fever rises higher each day by steps; general aching, tire, a no-account feeling, and occasionally nose bleed are symptoms. The symptoms which cause suspicion of typhoid are tire, aches, and slowly rising fever. When the physician is called he may draw a little blood and make a diagnosis by blood culture or he may postpone his diagnosis for several days.

During the second week the fever is at its height. The morning temperature is almost as high as that of the afternoon. The tongue is red and pointed. About this time it is possible to get a positive Widal. The Widal test is made with a drop of dried blood. This is dissolved and added to a culture of typhoid bacilli. If the disease is typhoid fever the bacilli are clumped and made inactive by the blood that has been mixed with them.

The following is the significance of these facts about the blood in typhoid fever: The blood of a man subject to typhoid has no power to destroy the bacilli of that disease. Soon after the bacilli get into Peyer's patches they enter the bloodstream and are carried to all parts of the body. At this time they get on in the blood about as well as anywhere else. The blood begins to change gradually. By the end of a week it is able to clump and make quiet all of the bacilli contained in it. By the end of about three weeks this bacillus destroying substance is strong enough to kill all the bacilli anywhere in the body except those present in the gall bladder and the kidneys. In some cases live bacilli persist in these two locations for weeks and in a few cases for years after the fever has terminated. During the third week of the disease the morning fever gets lower each morning until it becomes normal and the afternoon fever follows suit, but lags a few days behind that of the morning.

One or two changes in treatment have been more or less generally adopted during the last few years. Some very well informed physicians are trying to cut short the duration of the typhoid fever attack by injecting special vaccines. This method has been advocated by Drs. Gay and Force and other physicians in California. It is still an open question as to how effective the treatment is. Another year's experience should show whether it is enough of an improvement to make its use worth while.

Eleven out of each dozen cases of typhoid fever get well under good nursing and ordinary care. To make good this new treatment will have to improve on that rate.

Another proposed change in the treatment consists in feeding patients more liberally. In the olden days typhoid patients got practically no food except milk. By the end of the attack the patient was worn to a skeleton. He was very weak as well as emaciated. Now typhoid patients are fed much more liberally. In consequence, they do not waste greatly in flesh nor lose much strength. The feeding treatment has reduced the death rate somewhat, but it has very greatly reduced the period of convalescence. The recovered typhoid patient is back to "his old self" weeks earlier than under the old method.

But this more liberal feeding must be carried out by some one who knows how. Harm will result if the liberal feeding policy is construed as meaning license to feed any food that the family may want to feed during the illness or that the convalescent patient may crave. There are physicians who hold that the liberal feeding plan, while all right in well organized hospitals with specially trained nurses, should not be attempted in homes, not even when an ordinary nurse is in charge of the patient. Such cases, they say, should stick to the milk diet.

Another change prevents the diarrhoea, formerly so marked as a symptom of typhoid fever, by cleaning out the bowels and keeping them clean. At the beginning of the attack purgatives are taken and repeated until the intestines are cleared of everything but milk débris. After that the lower part of the large bowels is washed out each day by a plain water enema.

In the first six months of 1918 there were 17 deaths from typhoid among the 2,600,000 people in Chicago. The number of cases of the disease reported was 92, though it was probably nearer 255. The number of deaths in 1917 was 42, and the number of cases reported was 347. This rate is about one-hundredth of the rate which prevailed twenty-five years ago.

A good way to learn what to do to prevent typhoid fever is to find out what that city has done during the last twenty-five years to bring about this almost unbelievable improvement. The drinking water has been made safe. Practically no lot wells are in use. Every one is required to use city water. No sewage is allowed to be discharged into the lake near enough to the cribs to pollute the water supply. The sewers formerly drained into the lake. This sewage now runs in another direction. Boats are not allowed to pollute the waters near the lake. The sewage produced by the crib crews is incinerated.

But not all of these precautions were enough to make water supply that was wholly free from hazards. Breaks of one sort or another in the plan for control of the water at the cribs would occur. In times of low pressure the water pipes within houses would sometimes suck sewage from the toilet room sewer pipes. To obviate the harm from such breaks the water is treated with chlorine, the amount varying from one to two parts per million, according to the quality of the water. This amount of chlorine does not impart a disagreeable taste to the water and it materially lowers the hazards from its use. Most cities now have a reasonably safe water supply. If the supply is not otherwise made safe the authorities commonly use chlorine.

But a considerable amount of typhoid is fed into Chicago by drummers who pick up typhoid in their travels, by automobilists who who become infected while on tour, by vacationists who during their vacation periods drink water from the water supplies of small resort cities, some of which have badly polluted water supplies; from country hotels, many of which use water from badly polluted lakes; from farm wells, many of which are located near privies and barnyards and are therefore polluted by organic matter, and in just the right condition for infection by typhoid; from clean mountain and woods streams, doubly dangerous because they look so nice and safe.

The wisest policy for the drummer, the tourist, and the vacationist, is to be vaccinated against typhoid. Vaccination consists in taking three hypodermic injections of vaccine. The injection is given at intervals of ten days. Three weeks elapse between the first and third injections. For one day after one of these injections the person injected may feel achy and generally no-account and may have a fever of 3 or 4 degrees, but that is the limit of the inconvenience caused. During the last four years perhaps 40,000,000 people have been vaccinated. About 30,000,000 of these were soldiers and sailors under close observation. Nobody has been seriously injured or greatly inconvenienced. The record for safety of the procedure is as good as that of going to church.

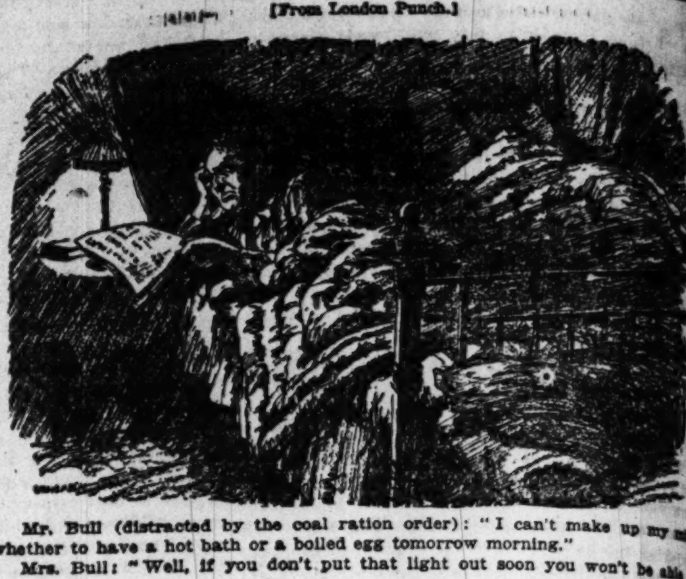
For the use of those who cannot or will not be vaccinated chlorine preparations to be used by individuals in the retail preparation of drinking water are on the market. Druggists sell halozone tablets. These are dissolved in the water. Some health departments furnish their citizens with hypochlorite solution ready for use by the vacationists.

The next most important procedure and one costing very little money in comparison was the pasteurization of milk. The indications are that milk formerly caused a good deal of typhoid fever in Chicago. Thanks to the pasteurization ordinance passed just ten years ago milk caused typhoid fever has been almost wiped out in that city.

Every town of any size should enforce a pasteurization ordinance. If the milk is not pasteurized at the plant home pasteurization can be done. However, it has been demonstrated that as a community procedure for the control of typhoid home pasteurization is as ineffective as "boil the water" campaigns.

THE GREAT COAL PUZZLE

[From London Punch.]



Mr. Bull (distracted by the coal ration order): "I can't make up my mind whether to have a hot bath or a boiled egg tomorrow morning."

Mrs. Bull: "Well, if you don't put that light out soon you won't be able to have either."

SPRINKLING OUTSIDE OF HOURS.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Can't something be done to stop residents of Sheridan road, south of Devon, from use of water for sprinkling outside of hours allowed by law? Frequently we have no water.

M. D. M.

My officers report that no violations have occurred in that vicinity since the receipt of complaint. Officers will continue to watch this locality closely and take proper action should any violations be found.

STREET WILL NOT BE PAVED.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Will Otto street, between California and Elston avenues, be paved this year?

MRS. J. F. J.

Our records do not show any proceeding for paving Otto street between California and Elston avenues.

A public hearing was held on the proposition Feb. 25, 1916, at which time it was ordered abandoned. If the property owners again desire to have a proceeding started for the improvement it will be necessary to send a new petition to the board.

DIVERSEY PARKWAY.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Will you please tell me when Diversey parkway was cut through on the other side of the river?

G. B. H.

The Chicago city council by ordinance under date of Sept. 21, 1891, turned over Diversey boulevard to the commissioners of Lincoln park. The commissioners of Lincoln park by ordinance under date of Oct. 21, 1891, accepted same. This applies to Diversey parkway from the Chicago river east.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—[To the Friend of the People.]—The people nxt door to me have their garbage piled in open baskets and pails. The condition is worse now that cats and dogs get into it and carry it into our yard.

A. H. S.

Garbage has been removed and owners notified to provide proper receptacle for same.

COULD ADOPT CHILD.

Chicago, Aug. 8.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A month or so ago, having had trouble with my wife, I was sent to jail. While I was in jail my wife gave birth to our child. My wife's folks, bitter against me, have succeeded in persuading her to get a divorce from me. They claim they are going to adopt the baby and my wife is going back to work. (1) I would like to know if they can adopt the baby without my consent, and (2) could I claim the child if anything should happen to my wife? (3) Also can she change the baby's last name from mine to her maiden name?

H. G. K.

1. Yes, if the "trouble with your wife" is such as to bring the case within one of the statutory exceptions.
2. Not if it had been legally adopted.
3. Yes, if the facts warrant.

DIVORCE FOR DESERTION.

Chicago, Aug. 3.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—My husband left me last October and later sent me a letter requesting that I send his clothes to his sister's and he would not bother me again. I have never received any money or any word from him since. Can I now apply for a divorce, or must I wait two years?

MRS. M. S.

You cannot secure divorce on ground of desertion until the two years have passed. If you could find him you could proceed against him for nonsupport now.

PROOF OF PAYMENT.

Warren, Ill., Aug. 3.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Can a bill be collected in the state of Illinois by a doctor who claims the bill has not been paid, although payment was made six years ago? I have lost the receipt.

W. A. G.

If the agreement was oral and you have made no payment or promise to pay in the last five years the statute of limitations would probably be a defense, depending on other facts not stated.

If you can prove payment, of course that will be a defense.

TEACHING AMERICANISM.

Princeton, Ind., Aug. 1.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Your editorial, "School Books and Americanism," was both timely and suggestive. The subject of it should not be permitted to rest until there shall be brought forth in this country a system of historical education that will instill into the minds of the young a sense of the truth in respect to the past, a spirit of sincere appreciation of our institutions and a patriotism founded upon an understanding of that which the race has achieved.

Perhaps, the greatest disadvantage of our present system is the degree of prejudice against England that is inculcated in the minds of our children by false and injudicious teaching. Instead of living in a lifelong state of prejudice and ill will toward the mother country, our children should be taught to appreciate the freedom loving nature of the English people, and to realize that, notwithstanding the quarrel which separated us from the mother country, it is from the persistent struggles of the English people that our liberties are derived, and that it is by them that the foundations of our form of representative government have been acquired.

Instead of the prejudice breeding and not altogether truthful books that we place in the hands of our boys and girls, it has occurred to me that some man should be found in this country with a mind big enough to produce for the young a book delineating the constitutional history of the United States in simple form. It should trace the rise and development of the parliament and of representative government. What proportion of the people of the United States really know what representative government is? How many of them appreciate its advantages?

The book should show the source of each of our fundamental institutions, why and whence they were derived and should implant in the mind of the young the reason that each of them has been embalmed in our constitutions.

How many of the graduates of our common schools know anything of the history of the first fourteen amendments of the constitution of the United States? They are taught neither the annals of the struggles of the English people which established their principles as the foundation of American liberty, nor why the fathers, and the generations that have succeeded them, have made them a part of our fundamental law.

If our children grow up in ignorance of these great matters, how can they be expected to appreciate the need of preserving them? Patriotism is not mere worship of the flag. It must have its root in the things that the flag stands for, and these things are to be found in the history of the race.

Find the man. Let him produce the book. Then let us see whether or not enough common sense can be pounded into the heads of our school authorities to adopt it as a school text. What we need is patriotism based upon appreciation. There can be no appreciation without understanding.

THE QUESTION OF LODGING HOUSES.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The announcement in THE TRIBUNE and the Daily News that the Dawes hotel has decided to close its doors to the hobo and panhandler should be a source of gratification to all patriotic citizens.

Institutions like the Dawes hotel, the lodging houses of the Christian Industrial league, and the Salvation Army, as well as others of similar purpose who provide beds for 10 and 15 cents, can do more right now to help win the war by closing their doors to "floaters" than in any other manner.

These institutions originated for the laudable purpose of helping the "down and out" by providing beds, and in some cases food, at cost or, in fact, at even less than cost. The advent of the war, however, has entirely changed things so that now with the critical need of the country for productive effort from every man in this country such institutions are a positive harm if conducted on the same basis as formerly; in fact, some of them have now become one of the fruitful sources for continuing idleness and all are unwittingly placing themselves in a position of working hand in hand with the barrel houses, the former providing the cheap housing and feeding and the latter the largest amount of the poorest liquor for the least amount of money. The floater and the constitutionally idle are enabled to live without working for longer periods than formerly.

The hobo is getting the advantage of the comparatively high rate of wages now paid to common labor, while his expenses remain on a pre-war basis. He need now only work but a day or two at a time, as by taking advantage of the facilities which have been provided through the kind assistance of the charitable people who are contributing to the upkeep of these institutions he can now remain in absolute idleness longer and under more favorable conditions than ever before. It is not surprising, therefore, that, while there has never been a time in the history of this country when there was such an urgent demand for labor in Chicago, there has never been more idle floating labor in Chicago in the past few months than for a great many years.

READING MATTER FOR SOLDIERS.

Chicago, Aug. 8.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I have received a number of letters recently from overseas and notice that the boys are requesting more reading matter. May I offer a suggestion in this direction?

If we could have large receptacles made in the form of wooden boxes or baskets and have them placed in the lobbies of hotels and entrances of department stores with a sign printed thereon, requesting that all magazines and periodicals be deposited therein for the use of the soldiers overseas, I think through this medium we would get a number of books that we otherwise would be without.

LOUIS M. VOGEL.

THE WAR OF IDEAS

By Louis Albert Lamb

EVERYBODY is dimly conscious that the actual fighting in Europe is only a prelude to the warfare of opposing ideas that will occupy decades after the peace. This war may be counted on to settle forever the assertion of governmental feudalism. The Germanic assumption, brought over from the Roman, that superior force involves the right of hegemony in every domain—political, esthetic, moral, industrial, and commercial—will see its final destruction before the present reign of terror comes to an end.

But after that—after the "right of self-determination" is assured to all peoples, great or small; after the "world is made safe for democracy"; after democracy is firmly established all round the world—then the tremendous battle will begin between absolute and limited socialism. The present war has collectivized every government in the world. Every state in the world has taken on powers and authorities which prior to 1914 would have been regarded as intolerable. More powers are being assumed every day. Individual initiative is being commandeered daily for collective profit. The supremacy of individual rights in lawful possession of powers and property is being more and more impaired.

It is very clearly seen that if this war continues much longer civil society will be quite as closely and rigidly regimented as any army ever was. The actuality is a condition of collectivism almost such as Karl Marx dreamed of. All disguises put aside, the civilized world is trying an immense experiment in state socialism under the temporary compulsion of a life or death struggle. The most conservative men of the old thought accept the radical régime as a matter of military necessity. They bow to its impositions and make the sacrifices demanded of them with hardly a word of complaint. The almost inconceivable centralization of powers in the hands of the president calls forth no more the old familiar clauses of the federal constitution. Supreme court decisions of the John Marshall epoch have lost their force and effect in the minds of most men. It is not a question of upholding theories of government. It is a question of saving civilization.

THESE really revolutionary ideas which are being carried into effect by all the governments, including the United States—these essentially socialistic innovations in administration—are they to be taken as temporary expedients, war measures, or are they to be understood as permanent modifications of state institutions?

And this is the terrain of the coming "war of ideas." On one side will be ranged all who believe that the cessation of the fighting in Europe should be followed by the restoration of the civil status quo ante. The individualists will be on this side in solid mass.

On the other side will be ranged those who believe that every war measure adopted by the belligerent states for the mobilizing of production and wealth—every collectivistic expedient enforced by the critical peril of the war; every added right claimed, assumed, or usurped by the state as a measure of self-defense—should be accepted as accomplished evolution and be maintained thenceforth as integral parts of the governmental theory and practice. The socialists, every degree and complexion, will stand here.

THIS coming war has been critically considered from both fronts and discussed with great freedom by two French scholars—one, the psychologist Dr. Gustave Le Bon, taking the conservative position; the other, Lieut. Alfred De Tarde, looking at the matter from a purely financial and economic aspect, and arriving at a conclusion which the most ardent collectivist can gladly accept.

The following epigrams, translated from Dr. Le Bon's contributions to Les Annales, Adolphe Brisson's Parisian paper, represent very fairly the thought of most persons who incline to the view that society ought as soon as possible after the war to come back to the system of capitalism, industry, and government in force before Aug. 4, 1914. Otherwise, Dr. Le Bon fears the people will sacrifice most of their gains in the war against Germany. Here are some of his "thoughts":

"The modern age seems to be headed for collective mediocrity.

"We meet many men who talk liberty, but we see few indeed who are not busy forging chains for themselves.

"Nothing can replace private initiative, freedom of labor, and the natural play of the exchanges.

"To be joined to a collectivism is to augment one's social force at the cost of one's personality.

"Great independent personalities tend to disappear. The collective being is taking the place of the individual. After devoting centuries to the escape from the gregarious state several nations are trying to return to it.

"Uncompromising partisans of state socialism will be more dangerous after the war than they were before. Having established the fact that state autocracy was imposed on all peoples during the war, they will postulate its utility in times of peace. All the evidence, however, shows that exceptional measures are valuable only during the continuance of the exceptional conditions that gave rise to them.

"If after the war industrial, agricultural, and commercial initiative are paralyzed by socialistic interference, our decadence is sure. There can be no progress without individual initiative, and such initiative is impossible where the state attempts to direct the complex organism of commerce and industry.

"The art of government will be more difficult than ever after this war, and the greatest difficulty will be to break up the universal custom of state intervention that the war has made necessary.

"The rôle of capial has been seen in its true importance during this war as never before. Not only the power of industrial expansion of a country, but, above all, its defensive force and consequently its independence, proceed from its wealth. We must not hinder the development of wealth, as legislators with socialistic leanings always do.

"Useful changes in society will proceed not from socialistic theories but from a nondogmatic solidarity. It will be chiefly concerned with the bettering of individual conditions by education adapted to the needs of each citizen, and by various associations.

"If the word 'solidarity' could displace the word 'socialism' great progress would be realized, for the force of words is often greater than that of doctrines.

"Democratic equality can be attained only by a system of education utilizing the special capabilities of each person, and not by political institutions.

"One of the clearest results of the socialistic revolution in Russia was to transform overnight a perfectly good army of several millions into a soulless herd, fleeing before the least attack.

"The great force of socialism is that in becoming a religion it easily subjugates souls. Such beliefs are always very strong, because they rest on faith without argument—the devotee believes and does not reason.

"The socialist is often a religious person who, having lost his old beliefs, and being unable to proceed without a guide, orients his thoughts in socialism.

"The power of socialism as a religion appears in this: that in spite of the irreparable disasters it would entail, its adepts never lose their illusions and keep claiming that they can rule society with their chimeras.

"It is necessary to forget entirely the psychologic motives which lead men even to fancy a society in which all the means of production and exchange would be exploited communistically. This conception, implying as it does a rigid servitude, could only have germinated in brains produced in German barracks.

"In spite of all their divergences in principle, socialism, collectivism, and militarism lead to exactly the same end—complete submission to the state.

"Suppress risk and competition in industrial enterprises, as the socialists dream of doing, and you stop all progress of civilization.

"Recent experiments have justified the conception of thinking men that the triumph of socialism would bring back barbarism. A people subjugated, as the Russians have been, by the socialistic faith, falls into a state of anarchy which makes it easy prey for the invader."

IN the first of these articles Dr. Gustave Le Bon developed in a set of epigrams his opposition to the adoption of socialistic war expedients as fixed policies of society after the restoration of peace.

Lieut. Alfred De Tarde of the French army, looking at the problem with the eyes of a practical financier and economist, sees an entirely different outcome. His views are as reassuring as those of Dr. Le Bon are disquieting. Also much more in line with practical common sense. He holds that the war will not result in the bankruptcy of the belligerent states; that the destruction of wealth, about which so much is said and feared, will be of negligible importance. The loss will be offset by vast improvements in all industrial and commercial processes, made necessary for the carrying on of the war on so vast a scale. The enormous monetary inflation incident to the war, and the free discounting of the future through government credits, appear to Lieut. De Tarde as stimulants of activity and wealth creation.

In fact, he believes that the augmentation of wealth by reason of the war will enable the taxpaying masses of the workers to bear their burdens with comparative ease. His only worry is for the coupon clippers who bought their bonds, mortgages, and rental properties prior to the breaking out of the war. Their incomes, being fixed at rates prevailing before the general rise in prices, must remain as before.

The old capitalists, and not the workers and savers who have bought the war debts and Liberty loans, will have to pay the interest and redemption moneys to liquidate the debts of the great war. The maintenance of prices on the war level seems to De Tarde an inevitable concomitant of the peace that is coming, but instead of regarding this as unfavorable he conceives that it affords what amounts to an automatic method of liquidation. Its necessary effect will be to compel capitalists of the old bond list to bear a major part of the national charges of the future or else to shift their capital into new productive activities. In this way they will contribute to the restoration of general wealth and at the same time avoid some of the penalty which the author sees falling on those who in the past have waxed fat from the "unearned increments" of society.

Lieut. De Tarde is extremely skeptical as to the working out of Dr. Le Bon's idea of an individualistic reintegration; he does not in the least believe that the states will consent to give up any of the powers that have been usurped or granted as war measures. In fact, he says, it is virtually impossible to discover in the whole course of history any case in which the people, represented by the state, have relinquished rights over property and privilege when once they had been taken in the course of war.

He dismisses entirely the possibility of a return to the individualistic régimé, giving complete assent to the principle of President Poincaré: "We must think of things, for the future, under the category of society, just as in the past we have thought of them in their relations to time and space."

The sacredness of private property, in Lieut. De Tarde's view, has lost all its hold on the public mind by reason of the superior importance of national necessities. He looks ahead to the coming régime in which tenure of property will be assured only by beneficial use for humanity. Only on terms of suppressing their selfish and egotistic inclinations, says Lieut. De Tarde, will the capitalistic classes be saved from destruction. And he strongly advises them to bow to the lightning changes wrought by the war, whereby the slow evolutionary processes of a century have been accomplished in three or four years.

Of the complete embodiment of all democratic ideals he has no doubt. He looks forward to the amplifications of the powers of labor aggregations and foresees a state of affairs in which only the worker will be safe and prosperous. The day of the social orchids and parasites appears to him as far behind us as the carboniferous age, and the day of collectivistic effort and humanitarian progress right at hand.

MOTHER! TO THEE!

By A. S. Alexander.

"Stand and salute when you see our bright Flag!"
You say to Mothers of Men!
But they made that flag and they love it best,
For it means the most to them.
Their life blood is dyed in the flag's bright red,
The white is their purity,
The blue is the heaven of the home they make,
And theirs are stars we see.
Bright stars that mean sons who have gone abroad
To fight for our liberty;
And they cry aloud to Fathers of Men,
"Hats off! Mother, to thee!"

Stand and salute when you see a bright star
Pinned on a brave mother's breast,
For her's is the honor, yet sacrifice,
And she is the one we should bless.
She gave up her son, the life of her life,
And sent him across the sea,
To fight for the Flag and hasten the day
When freedom for all shall be.
Ah! hers is a gift to all of mankind,
With her love for Liberty;
Then salute the Flag and the Service Star,
Hats off! Mother, to thee!

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

MID-AUGUST.

GOLDENROD in the fields, the helianthus by the ways; snapdragons and horse mint; sumac and button rockets; fields massed with gold; ways pied and gay. As the passage narrows its hedge is taller and brighter; as the way comes to the impasse its lure is greater.

Promise is shy as the violet and white as the trillium. The woods are open and have only red buds. There is the blossom of the shad which a rain may destroy; the odor of the thorn which only a south wind can carry. The sturdy stalks come which only decay can master.

The record becomes full and substantial. Heat and winds, rain and foul weather find and leave it undismayed. Promise with frail blossoms and shy perfumes, suggestions and intimations has no shelter from inclemency. Experience needs none.

It yields only to the ordained elements of its own decay. It colors as it comes to its end. As the year passes its meridian its true substance flashes its colors and reveals its qualities which will yield only to the ordained process which changes the green leaf to the brown, the ash to wine, the maple to scarlet and the oak to bronze, and all to brown and all to mold wherein the hepatica again will be pink with promise.

LEAVES FROM THE NOTEBOOK

of Henry J. Allen

WAR cannot kill the social instinct. I was impressed with that fact last night at a great place in a French seaport, where an American unit has been conducting a British base hospital for many months.

The hospital is located in an ornate building called in peace times the "Municipal Casino." It was a part of the elaborate equipment of a great beach resort where the business was taken seriously and expensively. It is surrounded by a park on one side and the ocean in the foreground or the background, whichever approach you prefer. Out in the trees of the park the Red Cross has tucked away a crude wooden barracks, called the "recreational hut."

It is only a few rods from the terrace leading into the hospital, but it is so hidden by the trees that its wooden ugliness doesn't mar the beauty of the grounds, pavilions, and other scenic equipment established originally to charm the eye. When I walked into the grounds with Maj. Lee, the commanding officer of the hospital, I heard dance music. Threre were no lights, but there was no doubt, from the swing of that music, that something not contemplated by war was going on under the shade of the trees.

"It's a dance night," said Maj. Lee. "We allow the nurses about a dance a month, always choosing a time in the dark of the moon, so that the danger of our German friends attending is lessened."

Then we came to this ugly wooden building, showing out dimly in the beautiful scenery like a blemish on a fair face. The music was exuding from this building. A few cracks in faulty construction let a small thread of light emerge here and there. You didn't have to go in to realize that, in the language of the society column back home, "a pleasant time was being had." An enthusiastic reporter would have declared that the building throbbed.

Then we went in. The interior of the shack was decorated like the ballroom of a country club. In one corner was an orchestra recruited from the convalescent patients of the hospital. It was a first class, industrious orchestra of about six pieces, and out on the floor a crowd which filled the place was fox-trotting as enthusiastically as I ever saw it done anywhere. The men were all in officers' uniforms and the women in nurses' costumes, but since this is the normal garb over here it seemed to be just what they should be wearing in a ballroom.

I WAS introduced to the matron, and we talked politely about the weather and of the fact that there was no moon. We spoke of the prospect of a quiet evening. It was the same old stuff about the weather, except that the significance of a quiet evening is a little deeper in a country where a clear night means a busy night at a hospital. Then the matron passed me on to a Boston girl, and we talked a few moments about the submarines in New York waters, and she let out a gurgling laugh at the report she had just read that the skyscrapers in New York had been darkened. Somehow, over here in that darkened French city, which has been dark so long that its people have forgotten what a street lamp looks like, it seemed laughable to read that the New York skyscrapers had put out their lights. Then we gossiped lightly about Boston, and she made some merry remarks about Kansas, just as Boston folk do back home.

Then, all at once—I don't remember who started it—we were talking about our work. I think she was guilty of the beginning. She probably said, "You must find your work very interesting." It's the way we usually start off.

And when you are talking to a cultured girl like this Boston nurse you realize she is making an understatement of the situation when she speaks of her work simply as being "interesting." This girl had had nearly all of her clothes torn from her body by the explosion of a shell when the Germans were bombing her hospital a few months before, but she talked very little of it. She admitted that it was "an unusual experience."

I notice that the longer you are over here the less you are inclined to speak of the things that happen to you. You cease to regard your presence over here as being odd, and you no longer explain the unusual motives which impelled you to come. It just seems the natural place to be helping in. I used to hear people at home explaining with fine satisfaction their patriotic and sacrificial gifts to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Liberty loan drives; it sounded all right, and I indulged in it without a qualm. But over here a man seldom explains to you, after the first week or so, that he was induced to come out of the highest motives of patriotism.

No woman who is really doing great work—as most of them are—thinks it necessary to ejaculate concerning her sacrifices. The personal equation dwindles. Service over here is a fact so patent that when you hear a man telling what his contribution to the last drive was you always know he's a newcomer. The only thing we talk about here is the work, and whether the other fellow is doing anything that would give you ideas for your own job.

THEREFORE it seemed perfectly natural to be sitting out this dance, listening to this girl talk about the latest method of doing something in a hospital. Out on the floor they were smiling and happy, as happy as they ever were at home. Conversation went on just as naturally as it would have gone on at home, only it was not on home topics.

It was on the topic of the day over here. I could hear a girl on the other side of me saying, "O, I don't know; I don't see much difference; they are all perfectly wonderful," and I knew that she was talking about the relative fortitude with which the British "Tommy" and the American "Sammy" bear their pains. Another girl was saying, "If there were just something we could do for their poor eyes," and I knew from this fragment, which was all I caught, that she was talking about the gassed victims. In a little while they passed me on to a Canadian girl, and she told me a funny story, but it was about the reflective philosophy of a soldier in her ward who had lost an arm.

I met them all—a charming lot of earnest men and brave women; it was their night of recreation, and they were enjoying it. They laughed as they talked; but they never got away from the war; how could they? It's the only real industry there is over here. The funniest story of the evening was told to me by a red-headed Boston girl with a pug nose—the kind of a girl who, back in the States, was doubtless something of a problem to her folks.

Here's her story—I think she got it out of a funny paper:

A new colored trooper said to his veteranized friend in the ranks:

"Sam, what do this yere 'goin' over the top' mean?"

"It means," said Sam, "jest the same thing as 'Good-morning, God.'"

It was funny, the way she told it, although I had heard it before, and I was still chuckling when I slipped through the door and stood alone in the park. Out on the beach the tide was moving just as it has been doing since God poured out the ocean and hung up those silent stars which I could see through the tree branches. The orchestra swung into an old waltz, and I walked away toward the beach. An officer and a girl were sitting on a park bench; I heard her say, "We've got to keep the dressings wrapped in paraffin," and I knew she was explaining to him the latest discovery that the mustard gas of the Germans is now so strong that unless all dressings used in field hospitals are protected against it they absorb enough of it to burn the patient as soon as the dressing is applied to his moist skin or open wound.

There was no place where I could get away from the war that night. I stood a while by the beach, and the waves tumbled in just as I knew they were doing on another shore so many miles away, but out in the moving waters were lights that twinkled and then went out, only to flash a moment later somewhere else. They were the patrols guarding that beach and the entrance to that silent harbor against the possibility of a surprise attack from the ocean side.

THIS, then, is the conclusion of the matter: That, as literature goes, the verdict or, rather, the aversion of the reading public may be disregarded. For literature is a cult kept alive by the "literary." And the fact that the general public no longer reads time hallowed books has really no more to do with literature than have the books it actually does read. Sometimes, for one reason or another, the general public talks about and perhaps reads a quite excellent piece of writing. And were there a company that insured the lives of books—though probably no author, even as beneficiary, would ever admit that any seeming demise among his brain children amounted to more than catalepsy—it is gratifying today to note the number of apparently good "risks."

One is here tempted to enumerate at least a corporal's guard of promising living candidates for the "literary themes" of unbuilded classrooms, but is deterred by the reflection that all such lists can but be dictated by prejudice and compiled by self conceit. Setting aside his own books, no living author could very confidently go on record as to what Arks are just now discernible in the deluge of current fiction, because in such matters any honest prophecy is a vain thing. Posterity amasses its literary heirlooms by no known standard, and when it comes to predicting which books will live and which are passing into oblivion via tremendous popularity, no person and no class of persons is competent to say what trait it is that, somehow, gives a book vitality.

Publishers, upon their purely commercial plane, appear agreed that the miracle is performed, very much as vitality was conferred on Adam, by word of mouth. When readers commend a novel to their acquaintances, so rumor runs in editorial fastnesses, the book's future is assured. "Now, that's what I call a pretty good story," says So and so, and Such an one receives the dictum with a confidence he would never accord the verdict of a professional reviewer, whose approval is vexatiously apt sometimes to be based upon the volume's merits as a piece of literature.

NOW the age old sneer against professional reviewers as being unsuccessful authors who have acquired, by virtue of demonstrating their innate incapacity to write readable books, a flib ability to instruct others in that art is in most cases pointless. Usually, indeed, it is the other way around, and one might enumerate any number of present day novelists whom the decade has seen like stars start from their critical spheres. Even were the old slur always barbed with veracity, however, its repetition need gall nobody. For the practicing reviewer of current reading matter has, of course, in the exercise of the trade no more concern with literary values than has the shoemaker or the magazine editor or the blacksmith in the pursuit of their several vocations. Indeed, a conscientious newspaper critic ought not to read much of anything. The books he is condemned to review are naturally out of the question, were it but that his contribution toward his family's support depends upon retention of his mental health; whereas familiarity with what mankind has in the main agreed to accept as great literature will handicap him without fail and ultimately will lessen the market value of his paragraphs by mitigating the infallibility of his tone.

For no one who cared cordially for literature has ever been a competent critic of literature. To the mental eye examples throng with the reputed contiguity of leaves in Vallambrosa. The men and women who made our enduring books have by ordinary been mistaken in appraising the relative importance of what they themselves had written, and almost every one of them has tended to estimate as a feather in his cap what posterity has found a thorn in the side. Put in weighing the value of one another's productions, distinguished authors have been wrong without fail. You must permit me a few pedantic citations of appalling instances. Voltaire considered Shakespeare a barbarian and said so without scruple or any great harm. Mme. de Staël complained of the "commonness" of Jane Austen's novels, of which the merits were equally imperceptible to Charlotte Brontë. Wordsworth termed "Candide" "the dull product of a scoffer's pen," to the astonishment of many who would otherwise have considered the author of "Peter Bell" an authority on dullness. Coleridge discovered nothing very remarkable in Gray. Southey complained that the "Essays of Elia" were lacking in sound religious feeling and pronounced "The Ancient Mariner" the clumsiest attempt at German sublimity I ever saw." Keats (at whom Byron sneered) found in the writers of the Augustan age of England only a school of dolts that mistook a rocking horse for Pegasus, and his especial indignation against their precentor, Boileau, is not unnatural, in view of the latter's plagiarism of his "rien n'est beau que le vrai" from Keats' most often quoted line, made with low cunning so many years before the birth of Keats.

Then Thackeray has left it on record that either he or Dickens understood nothing about novel writing, and Dickens agreed with him as posterity on this particular point has done with neither. For the rest, Swinburne was at small pains to conceal his real opinion of Tennyson, and Dr. Johnson considered whipping the proper reward of any one who would read twice a poem of Milton's. One might cite other instances, but the mad tale would stretch to the crack of doom. Its unavoidable moral would seem to be that this word of mouth criticism by concededly incompetent people, through which books "sell," is in comparison quite a competent criticism.

We come thus to the gist of the whole matter—that by each of us whatever he reads or finds unreadable must be appraised independently. One may merely say—with reverent acknowledgment that the verdict has no jurisdiction in remoter libraries—whether or not one likes the book. After all, that is the only thing about the volume which matters. If a book gives pleasure, then in so far as the reader is concerned it is a praiseworthy book. Everybody must decide that matter for himself, and no critic can help in the decision, from Mr. Chesterton of the Illustrated London News to Job of Uz, who first of all people betrayed the characteristics of a born reviewer by his disparaging resumé of the universe and his unconcealed desire to have his enemy write a book.

Police Enforcing Wartime Service Rules in Chicago

THE police department took a hand last week in seeing that the war economy regulations agreed upon by automobile dealers' organizations throughout the country are carried out to the letter as far as Chicago is concerned.

Hitherto observance of the restricted service plan has been a matter of voluntary agreement. Now all concerns affected are to be watched by the police, and violations of the rules will be reported—which means, of course, that it will be hard sledding for dealers who do not see fit to get into line.

In transmitting his order to police captains Acting Chief Alcock sent out copies of the new regulations, in which the war economy board at Washington has summarized the practices to be observed. Here they are:

1. Salesrooms: All salesrooms where either new or second hand motor vehicles are bought, sold, or exchanged shall be closed all day on Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days.

2. Service Stations and Repair Shops: All automobile service stations, repair shops, stockrooms, establishments where motor vehicles are repaired must be closed all day on Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days.

a. This does not apply to service stations, repair shops, stockrooms maintained for the purpose of repairing and servicing motor trucks and passenger cars that are used exclusively by licensed liverymen for hire.

3. Automobile Accessories, Supplies, Tire Stores, Vulcanizing, and Repair Shops: All automobile accessories, supplies, tire stores, vulcanizing repair shops for either new or used accessories or tires shall be closed all day on Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days.

4. Garages: Garages are permitted to remain open for the storage of cars and for the washing and polishing of same, and for the sale of gasoline and oils.

a. Disabled motor vehicles may be towed by tow wagons or otherwise to garages, but no repairs of any nature whatsoever shall be done thereon during Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days.

b. Garages are prohibited from buying, selling, or exchanging new or used motor vehicles, accessories, supplies, tires, parts, etc., Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days.

c. No repair work of any character shall be performed in a garage, service station, or repair shop on Sundays and legal holidays and after 6 p. m. on other days, except as set forth in [a] of item No. 2 of this order.

"You are directed," says Chief Alcock's order, "to notify the proprietors of all automobile salesrooms, service stations, repair shops, garages, accessories, and tire stores, and all other interested parties of these new regulations. Have your officers keep a close watch and where they find violations of these regulations forward a report to this office, giving all the facts."

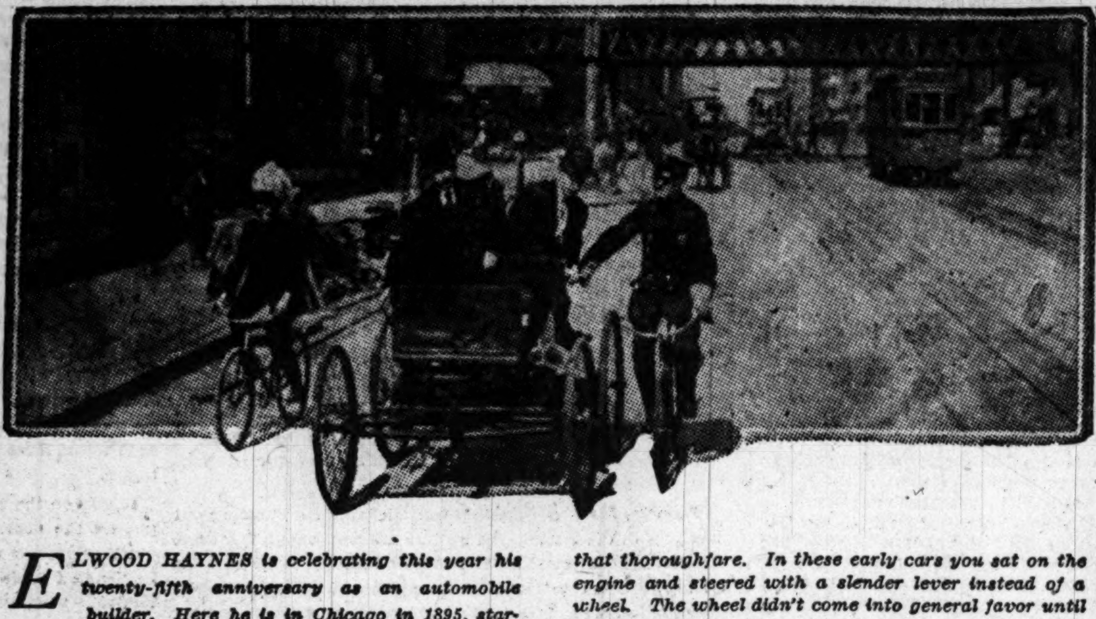
The rules comprise suggestions made by the automobile trade organizations of the country at the request of the war economies board, so that they are, in effect, the recommendations of the dealers themselves.

All sorts of influences are being brought to bear to insure general observance of the regulations. In some cases unpatriotic dealers who have ignored them have found their supplies cut off entirely by manufacturers with whom they deal.

"So far as the retailing of motor vehicles is concerned, all Chicago firms who combine the sale of new and used vehicles are complying patriotically with the order," said H. P. Branstetter, chairman of the special committee representing the Chicago Automobile Trade association.

"There are, however, a few un-American establishments, most of them used passenger car stores, which are remaining open in defiance of the order, and it would be well for the prospective purchaser of a used car to think twice before he buys a vehicle from one of these concerns. Anyone who purchases a car during the restricted period—on Sundays, holidays or after 6 p. m.—becomes a party to an unpatriotic act."

SCENE, CHICAGO—TIME, 1895



ELWOOD HAYNES is celebrating this year his twenty-fifth anniversary as an automobile builder. Here he is in Chicago in 1895, startling the natives with one of his early models. Everybody was on bicycles then—even the policemen. This wasn't a "pinch" for speeding, however; Mr. Haynes was simply told to get off the boulevard, since nothing like horseless carriages were permitted on that thoroughfare. In these early cars you sat on the engine and steered with a slender lever instead of a wheel. The wheel didn't come into general favor until about 1903. Mr. Haynes' claim to having built the first commercially successful American automobile is disputed by some other pioneers, among them the Apperson brothers (who also are celebrating this year) and Charles E. Duryea, but the controversy has never reached a particularly acute stage.

'Ware Broken Bolts!

If a clicking or tapping sound is heard coming from the crankcase interior it ought to be investigated at once. Open the crankcase and examine all bearings and bearing cap bolts. Should a broken bolt be found, all in that bearing should be renewed as the others are probably bent.

'Peak' Reached in State Auto Gain; Decrease Begins

THERE are now 371,726 motor vehicles registered in Illinois. This total was reported yesterday by Secretary of State Louis L. Emmerson when the automobile department at Springfield closed its business for the week.

The figure represents an increase of 63,583 cars over the mark reached a year ago at this time—a gain of a little more than 20 per cent—and is 31,435 more than were registered during the entire twelve months of 1917.

During the first six months of the year the increase was even greater, the registrations showing a gain of 68,599 over the same period in 1917. July, however, showed a decrease of 3,599, as compared with July, 1917, which evidently means that the reduction of output by the manufacturers is at last beginning to make itself really felt.

"This," says Secretary Emmerson, "probably will affect the remaining months of the year, and I doubt that our registration will reach 400,000, although up to six weeks ago I had expected it to run over that figure.

"Estimating the decrease for the last six months of 1918 by the percentage of decrease for July would indicate that 47,407 licenses will be issued for the last half of the year, making a total of 399,280."

The Experts Say

THE much abused cutout has one positive virtue, if no other—it may be used for determining the condition of the fuel mixture. By running the engine after dark and throwing on the cutout the flame that issues therefrom will tell exactly the condition of the mixture. If the flame is blue or colorless the mixture is correct, whereas a red flame indicates an excess of gasoline, and a yellow flame the presence of too much air.

Heat is the inevitable concomitant of friction. When the brakes have been too tightly adjusted, friction results and the unit becomes hot. It is a good plan to feel the brake drum after an adjustment has been made and the car run a while, for if the parts are too tight the heat present in the drum will indicate the trouble.

It sometimes happens that an engine which runs all right when it is comparatively cold, shows a decided loss of compression after it has become heated. This is probably due to the fact that the valve stems expand with the heat and do not permit the valves to seat properly.

If the motor fails to start after a generous amount of fuel has been supplied to it, the case may be one of too much gas and the remedy is to open the petcocks and turn over the engine briskly with the compression cocks open. This allows the engine to draw in enough air to form an explosive mixture.

The proper method of taking steep down grades is to leave the clutch in and throw off the ignition. This keeps the engine cool and the car brakes against the resistance of the mechanism. When the grade is unusually steep it may be necessary to shift to second speed or even to first. In either case this method of descending grades saves the brake lining and conserves fuel, and we must all be conservationists now.

In fitting a new transmission lining in the Ford, the new lining should be left loose enough to permit the pedal to be thrust well forward and the engine to be turned over by hand without difficulty. After the car has been operated for a few days so that the lining has become set, it may be tightened up by a single turn of the adjusting nuts. If the bands are put on too tight at first, there is constant friction with the drum, making it hard to turn over the engine by hand and in addition burning the surface of the lining.

XVII.—The West Michigan Pike.

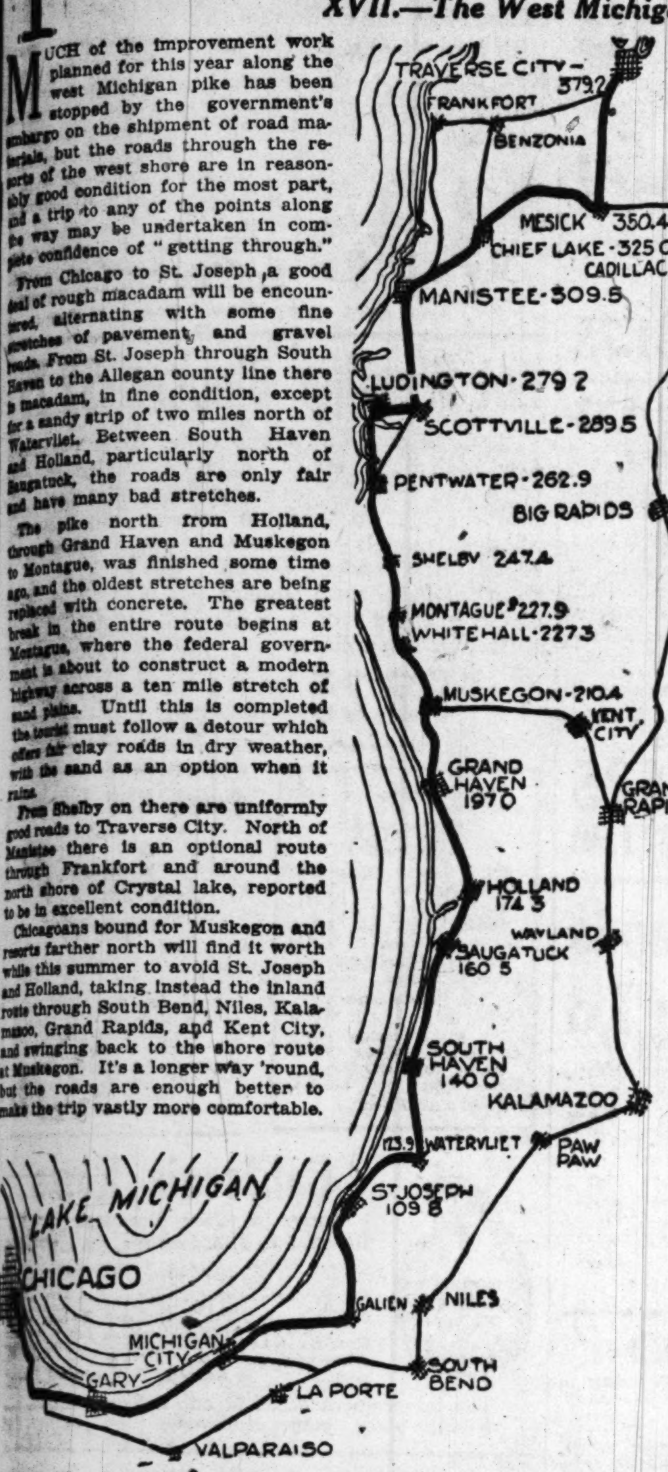
MUCH of the improvement work planned for this year along the west Michigan pike has been stopped by the government's embargo on the shipment of road materials, but the roads through the resorts of the west shore are in reasonably good condition for the most part, and a trip to any of the points along the way may be undertaken in complete confidence of "getting through."

From Chicago to St. Joseph a good deal of rough macadam will be encountered, alternating with some fine stretches of pavement and gravel roads. From St. Joseph through South Haven to the Allegan county line there is macadam, in fine condition, except for a sandy strip of two miles north of Watervliet. Between South Haven and Holland, particularly north of Saugatuck, the roads are only fair and have many bad stretches.

The pike north from Holland, through Grand Haven and Muskegon to Montague, was finished some time ago, and the oldest stretches are being replaced with concrete. The greatest break in the entire route begins at Montague, where the federal government is about to construct a modern highway across a ten mile stretch of sand plains. Until this is completed the tourist must follow a detour which offers fair clay roads in dry weather, with the sand as an option when it rains.

From Shelby on there are uniformly good roads to Traverse City. North of Manistee there is an optional route through Frankfort and around the north shore of Crystal lake, reported to be in excellent condition.

Chicagoans bound for Muskegon and resorts farther north will find it worth while this summer to avoid St. Joseph and Holland, taking instead the inland route through South Bend, Niles, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, and Kent City, and swinging back to the shore route at Muskegon. It's a longer way 'round, but the roads are enough better to make the trip vastly more comfortable.



From Chicago, follow "Tribune Tour" No. 9 (published June 2) to

REPRINTS OF TRIBUNE TOURS

So many requests have been received for copies of "The Tribune" containing one or another of the series of "Tribune Tours" that it has been found advisable to prepare a limited number of reprints of these routes. If you have failed to clip any of them you may obtain a reprint by sending a stamped and self-addressed envelope to the Automobile Editor and specifying the one you want.

Carrying On.

Hudson's wartime production for the second quarter of 1918 is reported to have been approximately 3,500 cars—a schedule which the company expects to maintain for the present.

Hupmobile is building 1,000 cars a month. This is a curtailment of 35 per cent, caused by government order, although but 30 per cent was asked.

By and About the Folks Who Make 'Em and Sell 'Em

THE Studebaker corporation has offered a free scholarship in agriculture at Notre Dame university to one young man from each state in the union, beginning with the fall semester. Awards will be made in each case to the high school graduate who submits the best article on the relation of the automobile to the farm or some kindred topic.

Thomas J. Hay adds his name this week to the rapidly growing list of Chicago passenger car dealers who have given heed to the diminishing production of passenger cars and added the marketing of motor trucks to their activities. His organization, Thomas J. Hay, Inc., has taken over Kelly-Springfield Chicago branch at 2815 Wabash avenue, and will sponsor the distribution of Kelly trucks in the Chicago territory, which includes parts of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Indiana. H. S. Dunlavy, former branch manager, will be in charge of the new truck department.

J. M. Kitter, a clergyman of Valley City, O., has a seven year old Overland which he wants to match with any car built this year in a non-stop contest. It was bought, he says, before speedometers were a part of the regular equipment, but he is convinced it has traveled more than 100,000 miles. For six years, he reports, no mechanical work whatever was done on the car.

The builders of the Marmon have recognized the increasing demand for rebuilt automobiles by obtaining a number of used cars and having them made over at the factory. When the jobs are finished the cars are sent to Marmon dealers in various parts of the country to be sold.

The Transport Truck company, a newcomer in the motor world, has been organized to build internal gear drive trucks of standardized parts at Mount Pleasant, Mich. The concern is headed by Milton A. Holmes, formerly vice president and sales manager of the Republic Motor Truck company.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry R. Lewis of San Francisco have completed the first leg of a transcontinental tour in a Dort roadster. They were seventy-four days on the road from San Francisco to Boston, and covered 5,339 miles without once stopping at a hotel, the car being equipped with a complete camping and cooking outfit.

The Bethlehem Motor corporation announces that its production for this year will be more than double that of 1917. A new group of Bethlehem trucks is on the way, the line comprising one and one-half, two and one-half, and three and one-half ton models equipped with electric starting and lighting systems.

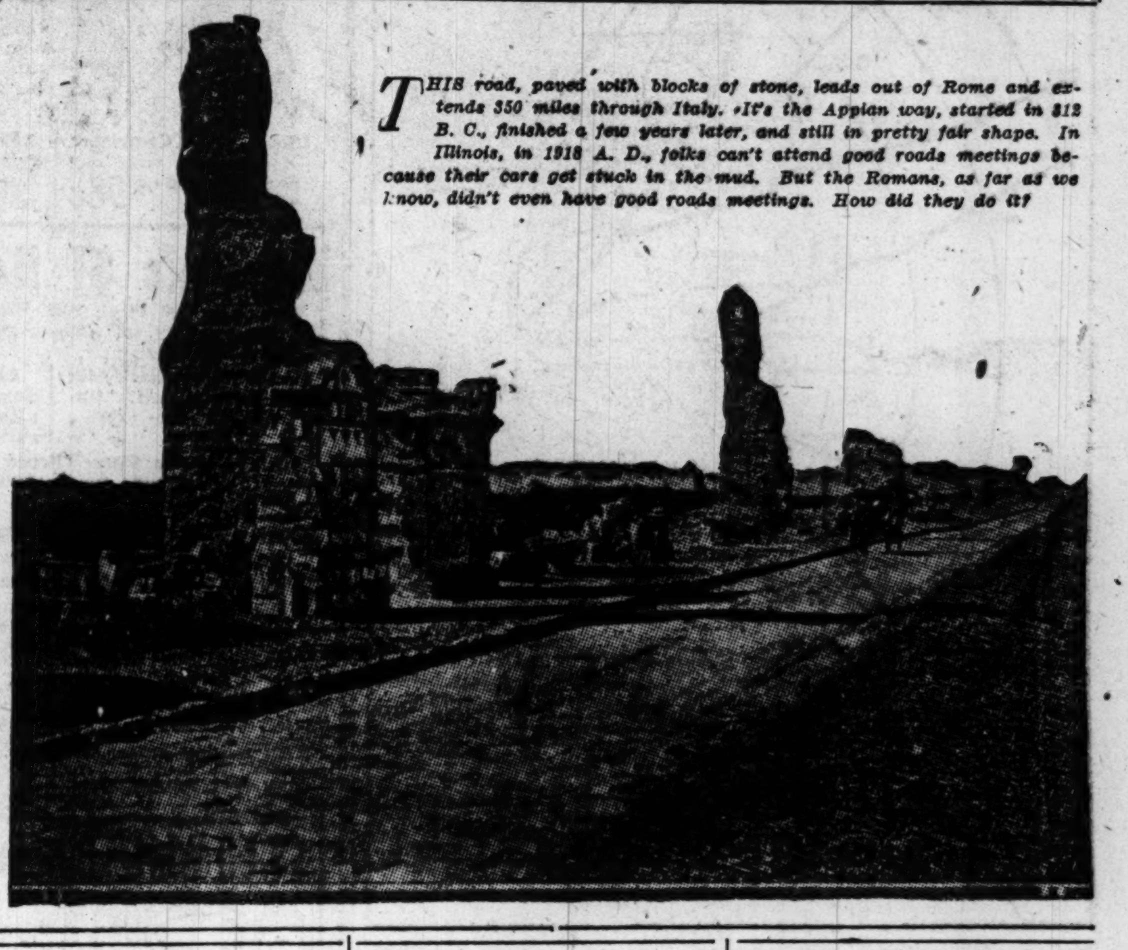
A record of 25,421 miles on a 4,400 pound bus, which runs 165 miles a day between Tampa and Lakeland, Fla., is credited to a United States cord tire by the manager of the line. The tire ran 8,052 miles on a rear wheel before a puncture came. It was then shifted to a front wheel for a run of 7,700 miles, and again back to the rear, where it lasted for 9,669 miles more.

The makers of Essenkay tire filler now claim to have more than 25,000 users of their product in various parts of the United States.

Word comes from D. E. Whipple that the Anderson Electric Car company has received a government order for the manufacture of several thousand ambulance bodies.

The service honor roll of the Goodyear Tire company shows that up to Aug. 1 a total of 5,109 of its employés had entered the federal service.

WE'RE ONLY 2,230 YEARS BEHIND THE TIMES



THIS road, paved with blocks of stone, leads out of Rome and extends 350 miles through Italy. It's the Appian way, started in 312 B. C., finished a few years later, and still in pretty fair shape. In Illinois, in 1918 A. D., folks can't attend good roads meetings because their cars get stuck in the mud. But the Romans, as far as we know, didn't even have good roads meetings. How did they do it?

Here's Another One.

Three lives were saved recently by the juice from four melons and a flivver. Frank Bogartus, who lives in Los Angeles, Cal., was driving from the east with his wife and two small children, and at Needles, Cal., bought three matermelons and put them in the machine. Between Needles and Barstow the radiator of his car sprung a leak and he found himself out of water twenty-four miles from anywhere, with the burning sun pouring down red hot streaks. Bogartus repaired the leak, squeezed the juice from the melons, put it into the radiator, and with this salvage was able to reach the next watering place.

Anyway, that's his story.

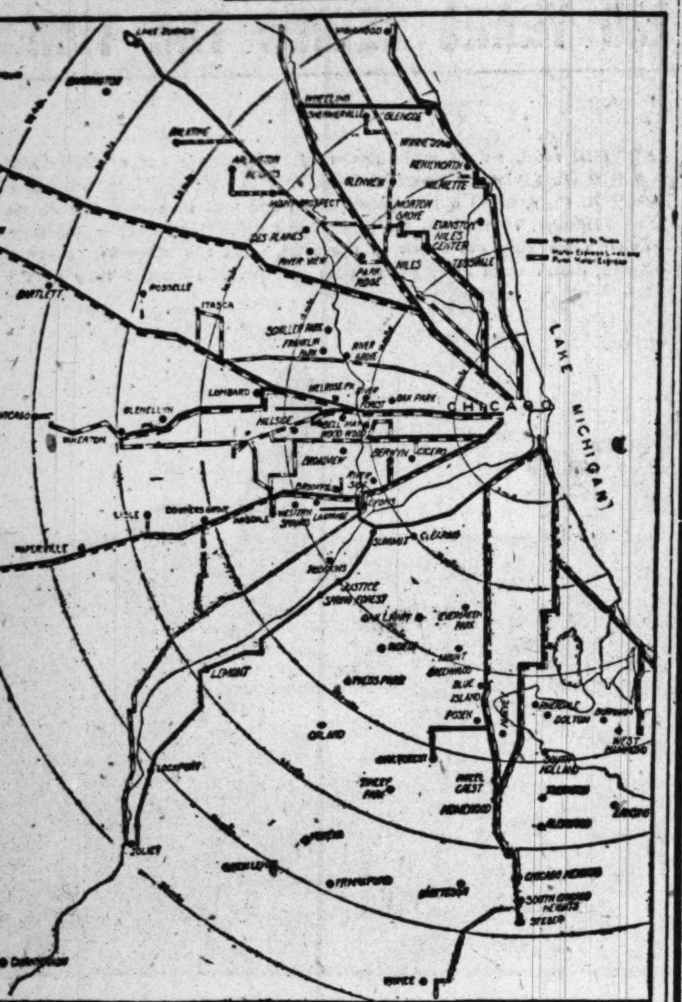
Defense Council in Drive to Shift Freight Burden to Motor Trucks



DOUBLE the freight movement by motor truck in and around Chicago; eliminate freight movement by rail in less than car load lots in and around the city, and release 250 to 300 cars a day—75,000 to 90,000 cars a year for general freight service.

That is, in brief, the transportation problem which the highways transport committee of the State Council of Defense of Illinois is now ready to attack in detail. The means to be employed in the "drive" are:

Establishment of return load bureaus in Chicago and surrounding territory, from Waukegan on the north around to Gary, Ind., on the east.

Enlistment of coöperation by shippers, receivers, and commercial associations to make the return load bureaus effective.

The accompanying map shows the Illinois territory in which the committee is now at work. In coöperation with a similar committee in Indiana, it is also dealing with the industrial centers of northern Indiana, east to Gary, as a part of the Chicago unit.

The highways transport committee's undertaking is based on a survey recently made in the territory covered by the map, and contiguous territory in Indiana east, to include Gary. The map shows routes over which freight is now moving regularly both by trucks that haul only owners' freight and by motor express lines.

From 200,000 to 250,000 tons of freight a year are thus moved now in this territory by probably 1,000 trucks; about two-thirds of it by private trucks and one-third by motor express lines.

About [illegible] tons of "L. C. L." (less than carload lots) freight a year are moved by rail in this territory, of which Gary, Joliet, Aurora, Elgin, and Waukegan are the outposts. Most of this, the highways transport committee believes, could and should be moved by motor truck.

Theoretically, 90 to 100 cars a day—about 33,000 cars a year—are employed in this "L. C. L." freight service within the thirty-five mile Chicago radius. Actually the number is much greater, for the average of elapsed time from the "spotting" of a car in this service until it is loaded and moved is three days. The number of cars actually employed is 250 to 300 a day—75,000 to 90,000 cars a year—for "L. C. L." freight within the thirty-five mile Chicago radius. Ninety thousand cars, at 60,000 pounds to the car, makes an annual carrying capacity of 5,400,000,000 pounds, or 2,700,000 tons.

Substitution of motor truck transport for cars employed in "L. C. L." freight service would not only add that much equipment to railroads centering in Chicago, but would, by so much, relieve already congested belt lines and terminals.

Some of the motor express lines operating to the westward of Chicago are already handling milk and other farm commodities to advantage. August Geweke, president of the Cook County Market Gardeners' association, is working on a plan for rural motor express routes that will serve truck farmers.

The main problem before the highway transport committee is to establish return load bureaus to furnish return loads for trucks going out of Chicago. It is believed that trucks now employed only in hauling owners' freight along the routes shown on the map can be utilized for general business once return load bureaus are in operation.

With these bureaus it may be necessary to establish pickup service in the outlying towns to assemble the return loads. One motor express line already does this, assembling loads at a central point in Aurora, using light trucks for distribution delivery in Chicago, and moving the freight between terminals in five ton units.

The members of the committee who are dealing directly with this question are Henry Paulman, chairman; F. E. Erstman, secretary; J. Murray Page, C. F. Handshy, William G. Edens, John H. Winterbotham, H. M. Allison, Leonard A. Busby, Britton I. Budd, John T. Stockton, C. S. Freeman, and Joseph Davis. These men work in direct coöperation with Indiana's highways transport committee, so that the industrial centers of Lake and Porter counties, Indiana, are part of the unit embraced by the thirty-five mile Chicago radius.

Questions and Answers

By High Speed

Is it advisable to take up bearings tight? An owner I know who had loose bearings took them up real tight and said that he couldn't crank the motor afterwards, but that he thought I should take mine up tight. That doesn't sound right to me. What do you think? R. T. S., Marion, Ind.

Certainly not. Too tight is just as bad if not worse than too loose. A bearing that is too tight won't oil right and it may burn out in a hurry. The bearing (connecting rod) should be just tight enough so the rod can be freely moved on the shaft. There should be no perceptible play, but some small allowance must be made for the oil film.

Is the Simplex car still being manufactured and if so, where? Is the motor used in this car known as a valveless motor?

READER, North Platte, Neb.

The Crane-Simplex car is still being manufactured at its old home in New Brunswick, N. J. From this last question I gather that you are confusing the Simplex with a car known as the Amplex, which was turned out some years ago and used what was called a "valveless motor." This latter car is not manufactured now.

What is Dario Resta's nationality? I am told he is English, but Dario Resta is not an English name. Can you throw any light on the subject?

J. P. F., Naperville, Ill.

Resta was born in Livorno, Italy, but was taken to England by his parents when he was only 2 or 3 years old. Until he came to America a few years ago he had lived virtually all his life in England, and still has the characteristic mannerisms of an Englishman. This is why he is usually referred to as English, although really of Italian birth and parentage.

Which shows the greater efficiency, a motor car weighing 1,900 pounds, carrying a load of 750 pounds and making twenty-two miles to the gallon, or one weighing 3,900 pounds, carrying the same load and making thirteen miles to the gallon? Also, why?—J. B. O., Clinton, Ia.

On the basis of ton miles per gallon the heavier car shows 30.16, against 29.04 ton miles per gallon for the 1,900 pound vehicle. But fuel efficiency is an easy factor to get if we disregard comfort and speed.

What is the meaning of a truck tractor; also what is an industrial truck? When a car is converted into a truck and the load is given as 3,000 pounds, is that the maximum load or the safe load? L. D. O., Chicago.

A truck tractor is a vehicle which carries a load and also pulls one. An industrial truck is a small vehicle used for carrying goods indoors or for short distances outdoors, as, for example, trunk and baggage carriers as used at railway stations. Industrials are usually operated by storage batteries. That depends on the maker. Often the maximum load is given and again the safe load. Better ask.

WHEAT!

This is the most favorable time to buy wheat land in the Northwest, and the Davidson District is the most favorable place. The high price for wheat, oats, and barley is having its effect on land values, and when we market our 1918 crop, which promises to be a bumper, land prices are going to jump.

Our proposition is ideal for actual settlers, but nonresidents can own a farm under our plan and we will look after your farming interests. People of moderate means can get a start toward independence. You know that the farmer is getting high prices for everything, and you can increase your income materially by farming yourself.

Don't kick about high prices for food. Get busy and produce some yourself. A card will bring, by mail, full information with a book of fine views of farming in Western Canada.

REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Doughboys

"Doughboys" means soldiers who tramp through the mud. Hundreds of thousands of our boys are thus getting used to being next to the soil. Fighting for land, often foot by foot, they will better understand the meaning of land. They will want to own some of America's soil which they are now fighting to protect.

When the boys come marching home they will find city life intolerable. In crowded communities the individual's rights are becoming more and more limited. In rural districts our "DOUGHBOYS" will find more freedom of action, more privileges and enjoyments. They will fit better into agricultural occupations than elsewhere. They will be well drilled for running gasoline engines, operating tractors for plowing, keeping the farm "flivver" in shape, and meeting all engineering requirements on the farm. Now that they have had a taste of outdoor living, they will not wish to return to dusty factories and stuffy offices.

When munition plants and shipyards close there will be a great movement to the lands. The government will see, as far as possible, that men who have been making shells and ships turn to tilling the soil. The lands and farms must have more men. Farming is still America's greatest industry and mainstay.

This is not a mere land offer.

It is a message that we bring home to you, that NOW is the time to act for your own good. Take advantage of the present condition for your own future benefit. The present condition is: That we have in several counties in the western part of the Southern Peninsula of Michigan a large collection of lands, many thousands of acres that are today so reasonable in price that almost any industrious working man is able to buy the amount of acreage he needs for a farm home. Our plan of purchase is adapted to the working man's circumstances. We maintain offices on the lands from which we co-operate with settlers, advising them in their farming operations. After a man has paid for the land we will loan him money with which to improve it. You will find us a financially strong concern of twenty years standing and a hustling organization which will remain permanently engaged in the project, developing the lands and resources of our district.

The message we have for you we have printed in well illustrated booklets, carefully written in plain words so that you will get a very good understanding of our counties and the opportunities and advantages there for the farmer. Write us today for literature. Tell us what kind of farming you would be interested in so that we will send you the right literature.

Ask us about our week-end trips to Michigan. You are away over Saturday and Sunday so that you take very little time from your work. Automobiles are furnished free to show the land, so you can see much country and make a better selection and do so with the least absence from home of any trip you can take to get land of the quality and at the price we offer. In the face of continued high cost of living and this chance of profiting, this is a matter of particular concern to you right now. You ought to write us this very day without delay. DO IT. Offices open every week day, Monday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

CLOVERLAND FARMS.

Wholesale Price.

Private party will sell at wholesale price on easy terms of payment, a few 80 or 160 acre farms of fertile hardwood land in the great crop producing Cloverland Country of Michigan. Will build a beautiful four room bungalow to suit each farm. This land has rich clay loam soil, that will produce abundant crops of wheat, oats, barley, rye, potatoes, peas, beans, hay, etc.; just the thing for diversified farming and stock raising. Will arrange to show you the land and crops before buying. Get in on the ground floor. Be independent. You have always wanted a good farm. This is your great opportunity. Act now. REGISTER AND SECURE A FARM
—AT—LIBERTY COLONY.

RESPONSIBLE MEN WHO WANT A FARM AND WILL ESTABLISH RESIDENCE AND REGISTER AND SECURE A DAIRY FARM IN LIBERTY COLONY, THE LARGE 60,000 ACRE COLONY IN SOUTHERN SAWYER COUNTY.

YEARS AGO THE MAN WHO WANTED A FARM COULD PUT HIS HOUSEHOLD GOODS IN A CANVAS COVERED WAGON AND DRIVE TO THE WESTWARD UNTIL HE CAME TO THE HOMESTEAD LANDS WHERE HE COULD SECURE A FARM FOR THE ASKING. INDEPENDENCE, HEALTH, AND HAPPINESS WERE HIS FOR THE TAKING. THOSE DAYS HAVE PASSED. MANY MEN THINK THE OPPORTUNITY TO SECURE A FARM HAS PASSED FOREVER.

BUT IN THE RICH CLAY LOAM CUT-OVER DAIRY DISTRICT OF UPPER WISCONSIN A PLAN OF COLONIZATION HAS BEEN DEVELOPED THAT ALLOWS ANY RESPONSIBLE, HARD WORKING MAN A CHANCE TO SECURE AS GOOD FARM LANDS AS WERE EVER TAKEN IN THE GOLDEN HOMESTEAD DAYS OF THE PAST.

AT LIBERTY COLONY A MAN NOT ONLY SECURES THE LAND, BUT WITH THE LAND HE GETS A MADE-TO-ORDER FARM THAT ALLOWS HIM TO MAKE A LIVING FROM THE START. HE GETS A NEW, SMALL, WELL BUILT HOUSE, BARN; COW, PIGS, CHICKENS; TOOLS AND SEED.

NO PAYMENT IS MADE FOR 3 YEARS. ONLY A $250 DEPOSIT ON STOCK AND PROPERTY IS REQUIRED TO SHOW GOOD FAITH. AFTER 3 YEARS, WHEN HE IS ON HIS FEET, THE SETTLER PAYS FOR THE FARM IN SMALL YEARLY INSTALLMENTS. THE LAND IS ONLY $25 AN ACRE.

THERE IS A DIRECTOR OF AGRICULTURE WHO HELPS THE MANY NEW SETTLERS GET STARTED, WHO HOLDS FREE CLASSES IN SCIENTIFIC FARMING, AND TEACHES THE SETTLERS HOW TO MAKE A LIVING FROM THE START.

LIBERTY COLONY IS NOT IN A BACKWOODS COUNTRY. VERY LARGE NUMBERS OF THE SETTLERS HAVE ALREADY LOCATED. THERE IS NO MORE PLEASANT CLIMATE OR MORE PROFITABLE DAIRY DISTRICT IN WISCONSIN. THE SOIL IS RICH CLAY LOAM, ABSOLUTELY NO SAND. THERE ARE GOOD ROADS, EXELLENT SCHOOLS. TWO MAIN LINE RAILROADS FROM CHICAGO RUN THROUGH THE COLONY.

A BRANCH OFFICE HAS NOW BEEN OPENED IN CHICAGO, WHERE SETTLERS CAN REGISTER FOR FARMS AND SECURE FREE INFORMATION. IN ANNOUNCING THIS OFFICE IN CHICAGO, WITH BEST QUALITY LAND IN AN UNEXCELLED DAIRY DISTRICT ON SUCH TERMS AND FURNISHING THE MEN WITH BUILDINGS AND STOCK, PROBABLY MANY PEOPLE WILL DOUBT THE RELIABILITY OF THE ANNOUNCEMENT. OUR REFERENCE IS THE STATE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, STATE CAPITOL, MADISON, WIS. FURTHERMORE, NO ONE CAN SECURE A FARM UNLESS HE PERSONALLY GOES TO COLONY AND INVESTIGATES. IF THE COLONY APPEALS TO HIM AS A FUTURE HOME AND HE THINKS HE CAN DEVELOP AS RICH A FARM AS THE MANY OTHER SETTLERS ARE DOING, HE CAN PICK OUT A FARM. HE MUST MOVE ON THE LAND WITHIN A YEAR, SO FARM CAN BE TAKEN FROM MAP.

MOST OF THE SETTLERS IN LIBERTY COLONY HAVE BEEN TAKEN FROM SOUTHERN WISCONSIN. NOW SOME SETTLERS WILL BE TAKEN FROM CHICAGO AND SURROUNDING TERRITORY. THE NUMBER WILL BE LIMITED.

LAND CAN ALSO BE BOUGHT OUTRIGHT IN THIS COLONY BY MEN WHO HAVE ENOUGH MONEY THAT THEY DO NOT CARE TO TAKE THE COLONIZATION PLAN. $200 DOWN PER 40 IS REQUIRED. NOTHING MORE FOR 3 YEARS. NO LAND CAN BE SECURED FOR SPECULATION.

CALL OR WRITE TO CHICAGO OFFICE FOR FULL PARTICULARS ABOUT HOW TO REGISTER AND SECURE ONE OF THESE FARMS. PLAN TO GO UP AT ONCE TO WISCONSIN AND INVESTIGATE THIS GREAT COLONY TO SEE IF YOU WANT A FARM.

AUTOMOBILES—GASOLINE.

The Empire

A NEW AND GREATER LINE OF CARS. GENUINE 1919 MODELS. READY TO DELIVER.

EMPIRE CONTINENTAL SIX

is a new and great car. It combines style with class, power with efficiency, light weight with efficiency. The right size "Six" at the right price. Seating arrangement for 4-5 and 5-7 persons. Wheelbase only 120 in. but looks longer, with ample room for comfort. The BODY is an entirely NEW DESIGN, with straight side bevel edges and SQUARE BACK. The cowl is high and rounded, with racing type of radiator.

ON THE EMPIRE CONTINENTAL SIX THE NEW FRENCH WAR COLOR HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE EMPIRE CO.,

"MARNE BLUE."

This is the color of the French officers' uniforms. Choice of ENGLISH COACH MAROON. This new 1919 EMPIRE is strictly up to the times. Its handsome appearance and comfortable riding qualities are in strict keeping with the first class construction of the chassis, which is STANDARDIZED THROUGHOUT. Standardization includes the world renowned CONTINENTAL "Red Seal motor," STROMBERG carburetor, BORG & BECK clutch, MECHANICS transmission, HESS full floating axle with gears cut spiral. Every mechanical feature is A1 in every respect. The units are highest grade and have a standardized reputation all over the world. IT IS A REAL CAR THROUGHOUT. It meets with every fastidious demand for style, finish, and upholstery and fulfills every requirement for reliability. During the past 8 years hundreds of the older models have been sold in Chicago and vicinity. They are giving first class service year in and year out.

ALSO A NEW GREAT FOUR.

This car has the same make of motor as a well known $4,500 car. All other units are strictly standardized, which means that in its construction is used the identical same units as in a large number of other high grade cars. OF COURSE IT IS ASSEMBLED, and the better a car is assembled, and the higher the grade the units, such as motor, carburetor, clutch, transmission, bearings, and axle systems, THE BETTER CAR IT IS. Today experienced purchasers inquire, "Who makes this part and who makes that part?" and the better the parts, the better the car, all of which means standardization. Now when you combine fine chassis construction comprising the same units as one or other high grade cars specialize as their principal features WITH "nifty" body designs, you are purchasing a car as good as any one needs, and we declare that this describes the Empire "4" and "6" models explicitly. The types of bodies on the 4 cyl. chassis is a 2 PASS. SPEEDSTER model and 5 PASS. TOURING CAR. These body designs are the very latest, the leather is genuine, the paint is smooth and hard. They are "classy" cars in every respect, well made, well finished, powerful, easy riding, and noiseless. WE OFFER TO EQUIP A GASOLINE ECONOMIZER GUARANTEED TO SAVE 25% OF AMOUNT OF GASOLINE ORDINARILY USED WITHOUT CHARGE. The prices of these cars are easily $500 less than any cars on the market of similar construction, and owing to our extremely low operating expenses we offer to split "50-50" with buyers on the cost of the freight and war tax. Telephone and make appointment to see this season's "style cars," either in our office or at your residence.

Considering the unfavorable weather conditions which prevailed during the greater part of the week, coupled with the always disturbing effect of the war, the real estate market made a rather good showing. It certainly was not a bad one under the circumstances. The downtown district failed to make the fine showing it did during the previous week, but it had another big store lease to its credit, and some others of a minor character.

Out side business property did fairly well, while residence property was much in evidence with several transactions, some of an unusually interesting character. There was a falling off in the volume of apartment business, although several fairly good sized deals figured in the week's business.

Manufacturing property probably furnished the most interesting feature, and while there were no particularly large transactions there were several of considerable importance.

Big Steel Deal Expected.

Of much interest are the reports current to the effect that the Pollak Steel company of Cincinnati is contemplating the erection of a large axle and forge plant in the Calumet district, and that a representative of the company was here recently examining large acreage property in Indiana Harbor, Hammond, and Chicago Heights. The company has its general offices in Cincinnati and branches in New York and Chicago. Its principal plant is in Cincinnati, but it is operating a plant in South Chicago. No confirmation could be had of the reports at the company's city offices here, inquirers being referred to the company's general offices.

The most important of the deals in industrial property was a lease with an option of purchase. It was the lease by the Illinois Central Railroad company to William J. Accola of Chandler, Hildreth & Co. of the plant formerly known as the West Pullman car shops, comprising about twenty-seven and one-half acres of ground, lying between One Hundred and Seventeenth and One Hundred and Nineteenth, Sangamon and Loomis streets, together with shop buildings and trackage. The lease is for a term of years at an annual rental of $5,500, in addition to taxes and insurance, with option to purchase at $120,000 at any time during the life of the lease.

Plan Big Improvements.

It is understood tht Mr. Accola is representing a corporation which immediately will make extensive improvements, and will use the plant for making new and repairing old freight cars. It is expected the plant will be ready for operation within ninety days. Chandler, Hildreth & Co. represented both parties.

An interesting transaction in west side industrial property was the sale by Niels Buck to Alfons H. and Remi J. Gito of the property at the northwest corner of West Nineteenth street and the Western Indiana Belt line road, east front, 160x283 feet, in Walter Mills' industrial district, improved with a one story building, 120x120 feet, for a stated consideration of $37,780, subject to an incumbrance of $20,000. The plant is used for the manufacture of grease and oil cups for automobiles, trucks, and flying machines.

Another noteworthy transaction in west side manufacturing property, involving a large improvement, was the purchase by the Star Cereal company from Ernest G. Miller of the property in Western avenue seventy-eight feet south of Austin avenue, 126x126 feet, for an indicated consideration of $25,000. The purchasing company, now at 2132 West Chicago avenue, will, it is understood, improve the property acquired with a plant to cost in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Store at 137 S. State to Be Opened as Apparel Shop.

A big State street store lease was one of the most important features of the entire week's market. It covers the store and basement at 137 South State street, in the block between Monroe and Adams streets, formerly occupied by the Independent Drug company, which has been leased by C. D. Peacock, Inc., to the Kolb & Teich company for a term of eight years and six months at a reported term rental of $267,000.

The lessee company operates several women's wearing apparel establishments in Chicago, as well as throughout the country, and is also a large dealer in furs. The store will be extensively remodeled and occupied by the company for the sale of wearing apparel, millinery, and furs. L. L. Sachs of J. P. Clark Street Lease.

E. F. Keebler & Co. have leased for Attorney W. G. Wise, representing Louise H. Keebler & Co. also have leased for Philip Hecht to the Bluebird Sweater Mills company a store in the building at the northeast corner of Broadway and Wilson avenue for a term from Sept. 1 at a rental of $4,500; also for E. F. Keebler to the Unity Drug company the corner store in the Keebler building, northwest corner of Thirty-first street and Wentworth avenue, for five years from May 1 next, at a term rental of $15,000; also for Best & Russell company to Harry Rosen a store in the City Hall Square building, on Clark street, near Randolph street, for men's furnishing goods, at an annual rental of $3,600.

The building is two stories high, of fireproof construction, and contains, in addition to a 1,000 seat theater, four stores, offices, and a lodge hall. L. L. Sachs of J. P. Strickland & Co. was the broker.

$60,000 House Lease.

An interesting lease of high grade Sheridan road apartment property was reported, in which Mary E. Loring has leased to L. M. Sherwood the entire three story building, containing three extra high grade apartments, each containing eleven rooms, with three baths, sleeping porches, etc. The lease is for ten years, at an approximate term rental of $60,000, on a graduating scale. The lease was negotiated by William T. Tangnay of the Edgewater office of Cochran & McCluer.

E. N. Duerlein & Co. have leased for F. L. Chapman the third floor, 100x100 feet, of the building at the southwest corner of La Salle and Ohio streets to the Brumbaugh system for a term rental of $15,900. The Brumbaugh system operates route directing and advertising systems throughout the country.

JAMES B. WALLER BUYS RESIDENCE IN ASTOR STREET

Residence property made an unusually good showing under the circumstances, furnishing several transactions of considerable interest. One was the purchase by James B. Waller from Marion R. Stephens of the property at the southeast corner of Astor and Schiller streets. It is a three story brick on a lot 83½x25 feet, and, while a nominal consideration is named, the deed showed a consideration of $30,000 according to the revenue stamps. Mr. Waller owns valuable vacant adjoining on the east and is said to have been largely influenced in the purchase by a desire to protect his Schiller street property. While he has no plans, it is possible he may decide to improve the two properties. Mrs. E. G. Tracy was the broker.

A deal in Oak Park residence property was reported in the sale by Otto L. Fall to T. A. Malm of the property at the southwest corner of Fair Oaks avenue and Thomas street for a reported consideration of $27,000, subject to a purchase money mortgage of $10,000. The house is a brick and stucco structure, contains ten rooms and two baths, and occupies a lot 100x175 feet. The purchaser has built a number of houses south of Madison street in Oak Park and will occupy the property as his residence. O. C. Braese of Dunlap & Co., Oak Park, was the broker.

The residence property in Oakenwald avenue, 927 feet south of Forty-fourth place, lot 30 feet, west front, to Illinois Central right of way, has been conveyed by Louis J. Brunk to Charles C. Chapin for an indicated consideration of $18,000, subject to an incumbrance of $11,000.

Chin F. Foin, head of the Mandarin Inn company in South Wabash avenue, has purchased from Herbert L. Clarke the residence property in Grand boulevard, 146 feet south of Forty-ninth street, lot 25x150 feet, west front, for an indicated consideration of $9,000, subject to an incumbrance of $6,500. FLAT PROPERTY TRADING DROPS BELOW AVERAGE $83,500 Deal Leads the Week; Several Good Transactions.

Apartment property made a fairly good showing, although the volume of business was not up to the average of the last few weeks, and there was an absence of any particularly large transactions. As usual they mostly were trading propositions.

The largest transaction of the week covered the property at the northeast corner of Greenview and Arthur avenues, lot 100x123 feet, improved with an eighteen apartment building, of four and five rooms, with annual rental of about $10,000, which has been sold by Julia Taken and husband, Bernard, to Bergitte M. Brand for an indicated consideration of $83,500, subject to an incumbrance of $62,500.

In part payment Bergitte M. Brand conveyed to Mrs. Taken the flat property at the southeast corner of Hutchinson street and Lockwood avenue, lot 39x125 feet, for an indicated $11,000, subject to $24,000.

16 Apartment Deal.

The sixteen apartment building with 100x125 feet of ground at 4325-33 Grand boulevard, with gross annual rental of about $10,000, has been sold by Roy B. Sikes and Jessie B. Beardsley to W. W. Hatch of Willard, O., for an indicated consideration of $69,000, subject to an incumbrance of $19,000. The purchaser conveyed in exchange for the equity a farm of 560 acres near Elkhart, Ind. William Blumenthal represented the sellers and John W. Brummsitt the purchaser.

Frank Ransford, president of the Ogden Avenue State bank, has sold to W. W. Collins of Fond du Lac, Wis., the twenty-four apartment building of three and four rooms, lot 100x125 feet, 4836-42 Hutchinson street, known as the Sunny Court apartments, for a reported consideration of $62,000, subject to an incumbrance of $46,000. In exchange the seller took second mortgage bonds, 640 acres of Montana land, clear, and 100 feet of desirable business frontage in North Western avenue. E. E. Stults of E. R. Hasse & Co. represented both parties.

Indiana Avenue Sale.

Richard J. Knight has purchased from Marion C. Cross the property in Indiana avenue 297 feet north of Forty-seventh street, lot 75x161 feet, west front, with flat improvements, the stamps on the deed indicating that $22,500 was paid for the equity, no incumbrance showing. The purchaser gave a trust deed to W. W. Baird to secure a loan of $15,000, five years, at 6 per cent.

In a several cornered deal, made a matter of record, Joseph R. and Gertrude R. Franchi acquired from Isaac Milkewitch the property at the northwest corner of Fullerton and Spaulding avenues, 57x125 feet, with business improvements, for an indicated consideration of $32,000, subject to an incumbrance of $17,000.

Other Transactions.

The same grantees acquired from Reinhardt Hoppe the flat property in Logan boulevard, forty-nine feet west of Maplewood avenue, lot 48x166 feet, north front, for an indicated consideration of $27,000, subject to $16,000. They also conveyed to Tinnie Wolf the property at the northeast corner of Sawyer avenue and Altgeld street, 32x136 feet, for an indicated consideration of $8,000.

Tinnie Wolf in turn conveyed to Hoppe the flat property in Clarendon avenue, fifty feet south of Graceland avenue, 116x60 feet, with flat improvements, for an indicated consideration of $32,000, subject to $20,000.

The property at the northeast corner of Richmond street and Berteau avenue, lot 47x125 feet, with flat improvements, has been conveyed by Louis Erickson to Bartlomey Ruzkowski for an indicated consideration of $30,000, subject to an incumbrance of $16,000.

$250,000 LOAN IS FEATURE OF WEEK'S MARKET

A loan of $250,000 made by Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust company was an important feature of the week's market. The loan, which is a serial one, with maturities from two to ten years at 6 per cent, runs to the Calumet company, which recently was organized by Carl Gottfried, president, and Normal M. Weiss, secretary, for the purpose of converting the plant of the Gottfried Brewing company, at Archer and Stewart avenues, into a cold storage plant. The present transaction is the completion of the plan, which had its beginning about a year and a half ago.

It is stated the major part of the present loan will be devoted to remodeling and adding to the present improvements. These are of stone and steel fireproof construction, and comprise a cold storage building of 1,957,500 cubic feet, ice plant of 100 tons a day capacity, grain elevator of 450,000 bushels capacity, and other buildings, occupying 109,200 square feet of land.

The land comprises the southeast corner of Archer and Stewart avenues, 144x122 feet, by 451 feet on Alexander street; the southeast corner of Alexander and Stewart, 501x47; Twenty-third street, northeast corner of Stewart, 301x48 feet, and Twenty-third street, 125 feet west of Princeton avenue, 25x48 feet, south front. The consent of the capital issues committee has been secured.

Greenebaums also made a serial bond issue loan of $50,000 two to eight years to the Ed Roos company of Forest Park, which is secured by 100,597 square feet of land, with two mill construction buildings, 50x196 feet, two stories high, at the northwest corner of Circle avenue and Harrison street.

Sherman T. Cooper has given a trust deed to the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust company to secure a loan of $40,000 one year at 6 per cent, secured by the property in Ingleside avenue, ninety-six feet south of Forty-seventh street, east front, 245x95 feet, with flat improvements.
